4 out of 5 are Pyorrhœa's victims

Pyorrhœa wins because neglect triumphs over science every time. This enemy of good health strikes 4 out of 5 after forty and many younger.

It is insidious. Its poison forms at the base of neglected teeth and, if allowed to pursue its grim course, it may sweep through the body, ravaging health and energy, often causing such serious troubles as neuritis, rheumatism, stomach disorders, and even loss of teeth.

An Easy Way to Protect Yourself

There is a simple way to place yourself among the favoured few. Don't wait for your gums to bleed and to shrink from the teeth. Go to your dentist for a thorough examination of teeth and gums. Do this at least twice a year. And start using Forhan's For the Gums regularly.

This scientific dentifrice is used and recommended by dentists everywhere. It thwarts dread Pyorrhœa or checks its progress, if used in time.

It keeps the gums firm and healthy. It keeps teeth white and protects them against acids which cause decay.

Children like the taste of Forhan's For the Gums. It is the ideal dentifrice for the whole family.

Take no chances with your health. Start using Forhan's For the Gums to-day. It costs a few pence more than the ordinary tooth paste—a few pence that will declare rich dividends. It is insurance that protects your health against the attack of dread Pyorrhœa. At all Chemists.

WHO, WHEN AND WHERE

BY THE BYSTANDER IN SOCIETY

"The Loneliest Monarch"

SOME years ago an American journalist, after visiting Sofia, drew a pathetic picture of the King of Bulgaria. He was depicted as living utterly alone, either in the palace at Sofia or at a small country house not far from the capital. Whilst destiny had placed him upon a most uneasy throne, all his desires were for a quiet married life and peaceful days which he might devote to the growing of flowers.

Whether that particular journalist was justified in putting the words into King Boris's mouth, he certainly wrote that the King had spoken bitterly of his matrimonial prospects, saying that he could not ask any princess to share his throne because of the unsettled state of his country. The article on the Bulgarian King ended up by describing him as "the loneliest monarch in the world."

The recent visit of King Boris to this country has revived echoes of this statement, echoes that, I hear, have caused much amusement, and some annoyance, in Sofia. King Boris is thirty-three, and his marriage naturally is of considerable concern to his country, but that is no reason why his visit to Balmoral should be given any matrimonial significance. He had been staying with friends in Scotland—his hostess being the former brilliant Mlle. Stancioff, his fellow-countrywoman, and the first woman diplomatist. King George and King Boris are relations. The bond is certainly one of remote cousinship through their common Coburg descent, but what more natural than a foreign relation staying in Scotland being asked to pay a private and family visit to Balmoral? And why, therefore, should people begin immediately to prattle about possible—and impossible—matrimonial alliances?

gossips at one time actually engaged King Boris was a daughter of the King of Italy. Religion, however, would doubtless have been a barrier in this case, as the Bulgarians belong to the Orthodox Greek Church, and the Princess, being a Roman Catholic, would scarcely have adopted that faith.

Religion and a Tragedy

RELIGION played a tragic part in King Boris's childhood. His father, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, married a daughter of the ex-Duke of Parma, an Italian and a devout Roman Catholic. He promised that all the children should be brought up in the mother's faith. But this promise, for reasons of State, he broke, and his heir, at the age of two, was baptised into the Orthodox Church. Although the second son, Prince Cyril, and their two daughters were brought up as Roman Catholics, the mother never got over the agony of mind she went through at the time of the heir's baptism, and she was always said to have died of a broken heart six years after her marriage.

When Prince Ferdinand of Coburg was chosen for their Prince by the Bulgarians, the Courts and Chancelleries of Europe laughed in their sleeves. He was then a young Austrian officer who had shown no particular aptitude for anything beyond a taste for vivid jewellery and a passion for scent. Europe gave him six months on a throne which was a catspaw between Russia, Turkey and Austria. But Ferdinand had a mother, Princess Clementine, a daughter of King Louis Philippe, and one of the wisest, most scheming, and intriguing women in Europe. She kept him on the Bulgarian throne for twenty years. A year after her death Ferdinand declared himself King of Bulgaria, and reigned for eleven more years. But for the War he would be reigning still. Then he made the signal mistake in a long career of political intrigue and success which had given him the sobriquet of "Foxy Ferdinand." He chose the wrong side, allured by the ex-Kaiser's glittering promises of increased territory. Within a few weeks of the Armistice he abdicated in favour of his son, King Boris.

On the death of his brother, Prince Philip of Coburg, six years ago, ex-King Ferdinand inherited large estates in Hungary, and there he now spends most of his time, still much be-ringed and highly scented. His grandfather, a poor Coburg Prince, married Princess Kohary, one of the richest heiresses in Hungary.

Lady Mary Trefusis

FOR the second time within three years the Queen has lost a devoted friend and Lady during the autumn visit of the Court to Balmoral. Three years ago Lady Elizabeth Dawson died after an accident whilst climbing a hill near the Castle; and now Lady Mary Trefusis has died at Truro after an operation. Lady Mary Trefusis, then Lady Mary Lygon, became Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen, as Duchess of York, two years after her marriage, and Woman of the Bedchamber, as Princess of Wales and Queen, an unbroken service of thirty-two years. But the friendship dated back to earlier days than the Queen's marriage, Lady Mary being a frequent visitor to White Lodge, where she and the Queen shared a common love for music.

Lady Mary was the eldest of Lord Beauchamp's three sisters, and before his marriage acted as hostess at Madresfield Court. She married a brother of Lord Clinton, who holds one of the oldest baronies in the peerage, the first Baron Clinton having been summoned to Parliament over six hundred years ago. This barony descends in the female line, and as Lord Clinton has no son his two daughters, the Hon. Mrs. Henry Fane and the Hon. Mrs. John Bowes-Lyon—a sister-in-law of the Duchess of York—are his co-heiresses.

Lady Mary will be greatly missed, not only at Court, but also in Cornwall, where she worked indefatigably and most successfully to revive the old folk-music. Her sister, Lady Ampthill, is a Lady of the Bedchamber to the Queen.

Doubly Morganatic

Another figure in Society who will also be much missed is Countess Torby, the wife of the Grand Duke Michael. Their marriage thirty-six years ago, in the Grand Duke Michael's case, was a matter of "the world being well lost for love." It meant exile from his native country for the rest of his life.

Countess Torby was the daughter of a morganatic marriage between Prince Nicholas of Nassau and a daughter of Pushkin, the great Russian poet. As was then the friendly habit amongst the small European principalities when Royal Princes married commoners, the then Prince of Waldeck created the lady Countess Merenburg, in order that any children of the marriage should have a name and title. The daughter, Countess Sophia Merenburg, met the Grand Duke Michael, a cousin of the then Tsar of Russia, Alexander III. They fell in love with one another, but the Tsar refused his consent to the marriage, and when this took place he not only refused to recognise it, but banished the Grand Duke from Russia and deprived him of his military rank. The little Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, whose sovereign was her uncle, provided the bride with the title of Countess Torby.

Happily, the Czar's disapproval in no way affected the Grand Duke's fortune, which enabled him for many years to live at Keele Hall in Staffordshire, and at Cannes, in princely magnificence. Later he and Countess Torby took Ken Wood at Hampstead, which was the scene of many brilliant entertainments, notably one, a great ball in June, 1914, at which the King and Queen were present.

With the revolution in Russia the Grand Duke's income ceased, cut off, as it were, with a knife. And, at the time, it was said that his savings, too, were lost, since they had been largely invested in Austria. Despite their sadly changed fortunes, Countess Torby never lost her courage and her unfailing good spirits. Their elder daughter, who was given the rank of an Earl's daughter by the King, is Lady Zia Wernher, the wife of the late Sir Julius Wernher and Lady Ludlow's second son, Mr. Harold Wernher. Their second daughter is the Marchioness of Milford Haven. There was one son of the marriage, Count Tory, who, I believe, is now in business.

The Hunting Season

THERE have been various rumours that the Prince of Wales would hunt this year from a house of his own, either in or near Melton Mowbray, but so far there is no indication that the Prince is going to leave his usual quarters at the Craven House Club, where he has his own flat. His hunters, too, are stabled close by. The string has been increased from 14 to 16, which may be taken as an indication that the Prince is going to get in as much hunting as his engagements permit.

Houses and hunting-boxes in the town and neighbourhood are letting extraordinarily well, and unless the dreaded foot-and-mouth disease breaks out again the season promises to be a record one—perhaps rather a harassing one for the Masters of the Hunts round Melton Mowbray, because of the number of followers.

Lady Ravensdale, who is now in America, has again taken a house at Melton Mowbray; and Mr. Strawbridge, the Philadelphia millionaire, who with his wife are regular visitors, has taken Sysonby Lodge, outside the town, where they will doubtless entertain the Prince of Wales as they have done in former years in their other houses.

Enthusiasts begin to arrive next month at Melton Mowbray for the cubbing. In November, when hunting begins, accommodation is at a premium.

headmaster as an elderly and erudite being whose knowledge of the world at large is in inverse ratio to his knowledge of the classics, that even in these post-War days of change it comes as something of a surprise to find a headmaster who has knocked about the world and gained his knowledge of it first hand. Yet, luckily for the rising generation, there are many such, and one of our newest public schools, to wit, Canford, has in the Rev. T. S. Macnutt, M.A., a head who, eleven months before the War, signed on as purser on a coal boat going to Swinemunde, then proceeded to Berlin, went on to Riga shipping timber, then to Moscow, St. Petersburg, then back to Riga and home through the Kiel Canal to satisfy his love of travel. In 1922 he went to Montreal on a collier, and in the course of his travels has looked at the world from angles which should serve him and his boys in good stead. His eldest brother, the Venerable F. B. Macnutt, is Archdeacon of Leicester.

A Fine Old House

THE school, which was opened on the same day as was Stowe, is housed in Canford Manor, the famous old house near Wimborne, which dates back to the days before Richard Cœur de Lion. In later days it belonged to the Guests, and the late Viscountess Wimborne was actually living there when it was bought as a school. The late Lord Wimborne, who was, of course, an ardent cricketer, himself planned the cricket field, which is one of the finest in the country.

The Americans in Paris

STAYING in Paris for a few days on the homeward way from Brittany, your Bystander was just in time to see the march of the American Legion down the Champs Elysées. It was a thrilling spectacle, the procession taking over two hours to pass. What a passion Republics have for uniforms!

The band of one State was dressed in snowy white, with glittering tin helmets; another was in bright yellow, with long sashes round the waist; a third in tarbooshes and baggy trousers; and a fourth in an exact replica of the English Footguards in the early nineteenth century.

The lady members of the Legion were particularly smart and attractive. They wore white dresses, shoes, and stockings, dark blue cloaks lined with yellow, and dark blue tam-o'-shanters. But these, again, suggested the graceful imagination of artists rather than practicability.

Bookies and the Tax

I HAVE been reading with a good deal of interest the views which a number of the leading starting-price bookmakers have recently been expressing on the subject of the betting tax. Without exception all the S.P. offices have been badly hit by the tax this year. Mr. McLean and one or two others even talk of going out of the business if the levy is continued in its present state. I do not believe threats of this kind will have the slightest effect upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer. But if the bookmakers can go to him with a well-thought-out alternative scheme of taxation I believe he will give it careful attention.

Alternatives

MOST of the starting-price bookmakers appear to be in favour of a system by which they will pay graduated licensing fees in accordance with the volume of their respective businesses. I have, however, failed to observe any attempt to estimate how much this suggested method will bring in to the Revenue. It is perfectly useless to go to Mr. Churchill with any scheme which will produce less money than the amount he expects to receive from the betting tax in its present form. If the bookmakers can guarantee as much money from the payment of their licences as the tax is now producing I am at a loss to understand where the money is to come from. It seems preposterous to suppose that the bookmakers could contribute as much to the Revenue as is now being taken out of the pockets of the backers.

Jockey Club Stakes

THIS week the most interesting race will be the Jockey Club Stakes on Thursday. No doubt Book Law will be a strong favourite. She is fairly entitled to that position by reason of her startling victory in the St. Leger. The distance at Newmarket will be the same as at Doncaster, and I expect Lord Astor's filly will again outstay her rivals. A certain amount of danger threatens Book Law from her own stable. I refer to the opposition of Foliation, who, it will be recalled, ought to have won this race last year. Mr. Somerville Tattersall's filly has had the advantage of an easy time since she was beaten in the Liverpool Cup in July. If she is at her best it would seem to be fairly certain that she will have something to do with the finish. Another filly to be taken into consideration is Bythorne. Her success in the Doncaster Cup showed that she possesses genuine stamina, and, as she enjoys a good pull in the weights with the St. Leger winner, it ought to be an interesting race between them. There is, however, good reason to suppose that Book Law has developed into a three-year-old of exceptional quality, and I look to her to place this good stake to Lord Astor's account.

Cesarewitch Outsider

I AM afraid we did not get much help from the Stayers' Handicap at Gatwick in our endeavours to find the winner of the Cesarewitch. This race is framed with a view to providing an interesting public trial for the big Newmarket handicap, and most of the horses which competed for it last week are also to be found in the Cesarewitch, including the first four that passed the winning post. The winner, Realm Park, appeared clearly to demonstrate her superiority at the weights over the rest of the field, and there is no reason why she should not render a good account of herself at headquarters on October 12. It will be necessary to find a 6st. lad capable of extending this consistent mare Not that she seems to be a particularly difficult sort to ride, for Kenny Robertson experienced no sort of trouble with her last week.

The Young Idea

I AM glad to see that quite a number of capable apprentices are coming to the front just now. George Baines, serving in the stable of Felix Leach, sen., has already established a good reputation, while A. Wragg looks like doing almost as well as his brother Harry has done. During the past few weeks little Wragg has ridden some really good races, and he seems thoroughly to have mastered the art of sitting still. His success affords further tribute to the remarkable aptitude which Stanley Wootton possesses of schooling his apprentices in the right way. A regular cluster of lads who have learnt their work in this Epsom stable will be riding in the Cesarewitch. There is sure to be a big demand for the services of the youngest Wragg during the remainder of the season.

Newmarket Selections

WITHOUT being of the same importance as the two Newmarket meetings which follow it, this week's gathering at headquarters will afford plenty of attractions. One of the puzzles which backers have to solve on Wednesday is the Great Eastern Handicap. In spite of her big weight, Endowment appears to hold a good winning chance. On the same afternoon White Orb may win the October Handicap. On Friday I expect to see Contraband in the first three for the Ditch Mile Nursery. At Alexandra Park on Saturday Jock Trotter is my selection for the London Sprint.

BYSTANDER COMMENTS

ALL THE WORLD'S A STAGE—

SIMPLE VILLAGERS SCRAPPING A TANK—

Rusty Relics

I HAVE just seen a picture that pleased me more than Chang or Ben Hur. It was a simple photograph, in which were seen a number of simple villagers scrapping a tank—one of those rusty relics of the War that are too often found defiling the pleasant English countryside.

Violating Village Greens

WHAT bright brain conceived the idea of dumping these longshore Dreadnoughts upon our lovely land I cannot say, but I would like to hear that he has been given the job of clearing up the mess. It was a silly notion, even for those hectic post-War days when we weren't quite ourselves, but I can quite understand that any sensible man who had the moral courage to protest against the violation of his village green got short shrift from the patriotic majority.

A Friendly Lead

BUT events have proved him to be right, and now that one village has given us a friendly lead, let us hope that the noble army of superannuated tanks will be sent marching into oblivion. There are a few other War memorials that never would be missed, but this raises a more delicate question, for no one would care to hurt the feelings of a sincere though inartistic country community.

Art Robots

TALKING of artistic matters, I have just paid a visit to the Photographic Salon in Pall Mall. What a jolly show it is! I am quite sure that Chelsea and St. John's Wood will descend upon me in a body, and that my name will be mud where artists most do congregate; but I am firm in my conviction that the Royal Academy and all those later exhibitions of the New Art have something to learn from the man with the camera. Mechanical robots of the art world they may be, but I would gladly give house-room to a dozen of these fine prints, and that is more than you can say of some collections of hand-made art.

Don't Tell Me!

BESIDES, I'm not at all sure that some of these photographs are so mechanical in creation as their creators would have us believe. It is inconceivable that the lens of a camera could record half the beauties to be seen in this year's Photographic Salon. Those sea-scapes! Those delicate still-life studies! Those atmospheric countrysides! Don't tell me that the mere holding of a mirror to nature could bring about such results. I shall have to consider taking proceedings against the promoters for obtaining my shilling under false pretences.

May I Suggest—

A LONDON magistrate caused a mild sensation by threatening to have the law on conductors of motor omnibuses who were lacking in regard and provocative in their attitude towards the travelling public. Myself, I have never come across one instance of such boorishness, and I am an inveterate patron of public cars. May I suggest that it is unwise to generalise; that 'bus conductors are only human—we all have our bad days—and that even magistrates may be in the wrong when it comes to a slight difference of opinion as to the starting or the stopping of a 'bus.

A Modern Horatius

ANY man who deals with the public in bulk has a lot to put up with. The 'bus conductor rather reminds me of that Horatius Cockles who held the bridge in the days before Mussolini took over his job. The 'bus conductor hasn't even a couple of pals to regulate the rush, and on those rare occasions when he has had words with a passenger in my presence the passenger has always been in the wrong. As I imagine the magistrate in question may possibly regret his rather sweeping statement I won't press the matter further, beyond saying that I would rather be a magistrate with all my myrmidons around me than a solitary 'bus conductor holding the fort upon my lonely footboard.

A Marshal's Memoirs

It seems that Marshal Foch has written his memoirs and has refused a fortune for them, on the grounds that they must not be published until after his death. Not only will the Marshal secure mere posthumous fame as an author, but he will also miss the money that might have gladdened his old age. Why shouldn't he make the best of both worlds? Any publisher would, I imagine, purchase the memoirs for cash down, on the solemn assurance that they would not see the light until the author is no longer with us.

My Handicap

Golf galleries can be very tiresome, and I have always supposed that they must greatly handicap competitors in the big events. But Bobby Jones, in his new book, has quite a good word for the spectators who crowd round the greens during the most ticklish moments of the game. However, I still believe that the only thing which stands between me and the Open Championship is the gallery. My temperament, you understand!

Prince Bill

A theatrical correspondent hints darkly that a new Hamlet will shortly amble into the limelight, and there has been some speculation in the clubs on the identity of this particular hero. Many of our leading men have already played the Prince, while others are physically unsuited for the task. Then who is the dark horse? Can it be Billy Merson, I wonder?

Rival Remedies

At a period when the call of Cannes, to say nothing of the summons of Switzerland, makes the Channel populous with apprehensive humanity, I gladly pass on the tip that cottonwool in the ears is a good thing to prevent sea-sickness. A very famous medical man also tells me that if you are affected with astigmatism a bandage over one eye will work wonders. And he swears he isn't pulling my leg.

Too Nerve-racking

A social expert of real standing—one who has indubitably seen a photograph of the Prince and read an article by Viscount Castlerosse—tells me that the tablecloth is coming back. I am delighted to hear it. No longer shall I sit beneath the appealing and apprehensive eye of an agitated hostess who fears for the French polishing of her dining table. The thing was too nerve-racking for words, and when we return to the old order, I shall be able to spill my port with all the aplomb of the three-bottle man that I am not.

Realism and the Films

It was interesting to meet M. Nelpas, the French film magnate, at the luncheon given in his honour by European Motion Pictures, Ltd., the other day. M. Nelpas is the "big noise" in France, and has just built a very fine studio on the borders of Paris, where he is carrying out his ideal of making films really well or not at all. M. Nelpas is also a firm believer in playing French people in French films, British people in British films, and so on, and cannot understand why the British film producers should complain about the local atmosphere—otherwise, according to M. Nelpas, London is always in a fog, so a London film should feature a fog!

RUGGER REFLECTIONS

GETTING DOWN TO IT

A NEW SKIPPER

D. E. Law, who this season is Birkenhead Park's new captain. He has played for Cheshire and England, gaining his first international cap last season against Ireland

THE gentlemen from New South Wales opened our season for us. The moment they arrived in the West Country everyone sort of sat up and took notice of the fact that the Rugger season had begun again—"thank heaven!" This because the "Waratahs," as people call them, had an excellent Press. One heard that they had "giant forwards who run like deer": that they "tackle like tigers"—how does a tiger tackle? has anyone tried the experience? correspondence invited: that they were "broad of shoulder and deep-chested, tapering away finely, splendid specimens of Australia's young manhood"—and all that. What impressed me so deeply was when I read that their six weeks' "sojourn" (my aunt!) on board ship did not seem to have affected their fitness very much. I felt they must be anything but ordinary men in this case, for everyone who is anyone knows how absolutely rotten a fellow feels after a six weeks' sea voyage! Only the very fit can stand it.

So one had, at great expense, to go down to the West Country (note my capital letters) to have a look—see for oneself. I am sorry to have to report that I saw no deer and no giants. What I did see was a "damgood" club side; fit, fast, and, of course, fearless. The weakness at the moment is forward—but so it is in many another famous club side about the country. People are comparing favourably these Waratahs to Gallaher's All Black side. I see no justification for that. Dave Gallaher's lot had no weakness anywhere, especially amongst his magnificent pack. It is true that their big men, J. A. Ford and J. Thorn, are big forwards and horribly fast. But there is no cause for alarm in this. We shall see some splendid games from the Waratahs' British tour, and they will make us sit up in the stands. But I venture to predict, having watched twenty-seven of them play in relays during their trial, that the Combined Services, London, and England, all at Twickenham, will keep them devilish busy. Lastly, these New South Wales coves are the more welcome because they are individually off the field, and collectively between the touch flags, a splendid body of sportsmen, so that IF they beat all our crack sides we shan't care two hoots. Good luck to them, say all Rugger Bystanders.

Twickenham, as these words of wisdom are being written, is in process of self-improvement. You will see, my masters, a practically new and portentiously large east stand, capable of accommodating 5,500 more yelling enthusiasts. Also heaps more room for the chauffeurs, gents of leisure, and other dignitaries on the southern slope; 5,500 extra seats (and the same colossal wangling for the International ticket!) and increased standing room for yet another 5,500. The approach roads, needless to say, maintain the status quo ante bellum (will my House Master please note the Latin?), because they, like the good old British Constitution, are immutable and immovable. So heaven protect the 11,000 additional late-comers on March 17, when all the weight, dignity, and dourness of Scotland will parade for our undoing (perhaps!). When daring to write about the headquarters of the Rugby game in England one must remove all one's hats and assume a bending posture before remarking that it is a little odd the hallowed ground improvements could not have been completed before the commencement of the season.

And the clubs. Great Scot, see how they run and grow. Here is Rosslyn Park with ten teams to play regularly; and the good old Saracens have at last found a ground—three grounds, in fact; they have been searching for them, man and boy, these last fifty-four years. Here is Upper Clapton putting six teams in the field—a good show. Edgware has got a brand new ground, and succeeds in getting the President of the Union to come down and open it—an intrepid traveller is Vice-Admiral Percy Royds.

"Wakers," when not too busy writing for the "Midnight Mail," will skipper the 'Quins side. They were weak forward last season. They will now be strong, since the presence of England's skipper in a pack makes the whole difference. At least, so the Welsh tell me. Blackheath—er—"The Club," beg pardon—has lost four of last season's pack and Kendall behind the scrum; overseas jobs have claimed them all. But most of the other backs are still available. There is such a plethora of star performers ready to pull up their red and black stockings on Saturdays that an infinity of tact must surely be required by the selection committee!

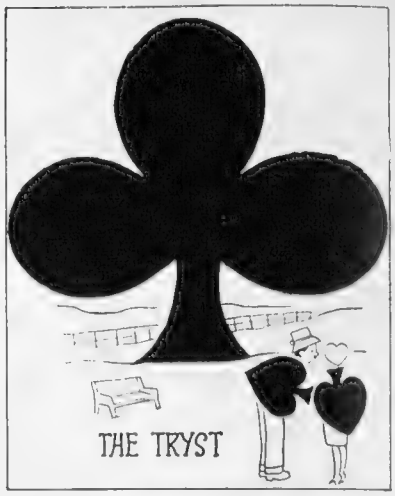
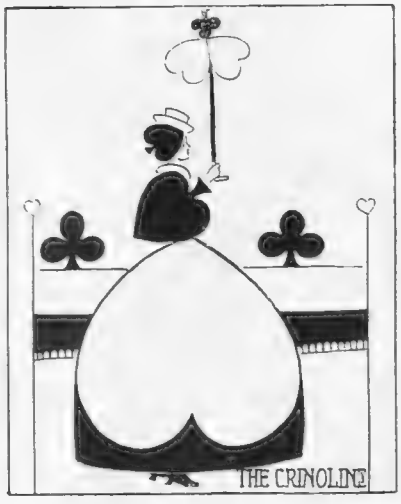
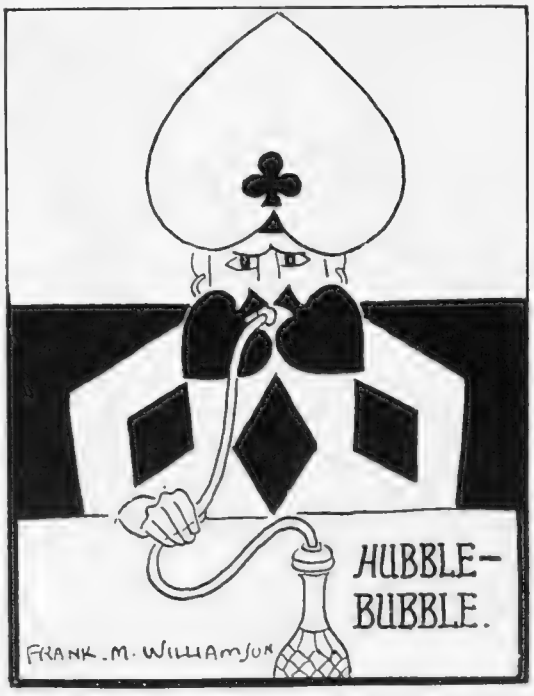
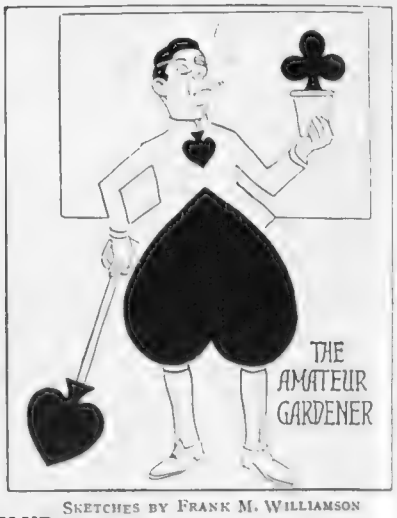
BRIDGE IN EASY LESSONS

HOW TO MAKE GRAND, LITTLE AND TOLERABLE SLAMS









SKETCHES BY FRANK M. WILLIAMSON

SOME SUGGESTED DECORATIONS FOR A BRIDGE CLUB

CAN you look your partner in the face after an evening of bridge, or do you sneak home through various alleyways and kick the cat on your way to bed? In this day of advanced social activities and obligations you may soon find yourself a mere nobody if you know not the genealogy of the Jack of Hearts. You will be one of those about whom people say pooh-pooh.

Now we will suppose that you are a beginner. Bridge is played with bits of cardboard called Spades, Lilies, and several other words of which the less said the better. Someone has to deal the cards around the table. How is this done, you will say. I will tell you, myself. You turn to the person on your left and say,

"What am I thinking of?"

He will say, "A whiskey and soda," or something.

"Wrong," you will answer, not having thought of soda at all. That lets him out. Now you turn to the other players and ask them the same question. All of them will be wrong, because you are thinking of nothing, and so the deal is yours, probably.

Dealing may be done in several ways, the late Mrs. MacGurgle favoured the following, and you know who she was. Place the cards in an empty cigar box and shake violently. Then take them out, arrange to suit yourself, and deal. First, with the left hand and then with the right, one here, one there, with an occasional one on the floor for exercise. You must be careful here not to become careless and use the pack in your vest pocket, as you may need that later in the game. After everyone has counted their cards you deal again, or supply the odd Ace or two from the aforementioned vest.

Now you count the suits in your hand. Some prefer Diamonds, some Clubs, and still others blue flannel or Harris tweed. Two Clubs is a very nice bid, while three Spades is favoured in some circles. At this stage you should look at your partner for signs of animation or otherwise. If he seems to be in distress, remember that from two to five cards may be shoved to him under the table, but if you are detected by your opponents they are entitled to a penalty kick. Now we come to Problem One.

X's HAND
Spades—A. K, E, 87, $
Hearts—@ 12 K, etc.
Diamonds—yes
Clubs.—Liberal

A's HAND
Spades—None*
Hearts—None*
Diamonds—None*
Clubs—None*
* Dropped his cards

G's HAND
Spades—1, 2, 3, 0, & ½
Hearts—Weak
Diamonds—2 (3 carats)
Clubs—Conservative

M's HAND
Spades—4, 6, V.C.
Hearts—A, K, Q, J, 10 (he dealt)
Diamonds—All of them
Clubs—From 1 to 6 inclusive

M leads with his Jack, and G feints with his 4, covering his Heart. X being more or less a dummy, goes off to start the gramophone. A, who is gathering his cards under the table, emerges with the 3 of Clubs, and the remains of two cigars. The game is now on, and play becomes fast and furious. But you must beware of the score-keeper amid all the tumult of the game. The best scorers are found among Bishops and Minor Prophets. Anyone else is apt to become a bit careless about putting numbers under the "They" column. As we were saying, G takes the first trick for no apparent reason whatever, and X discards his Diamonds. A, who was dropped when a baby, discards everything but one spat and the nine of Spades. This is what we call "finesse."

Not to be able to keep score lays one open to ostracism (a form of parasitic growth found in East Zululand) and for which there is no remedy except two parts of cyanide in a pint of goat's milk. Shake well. The score for a grand slam is something tremendous; for a little slam it is 1608, the year of the Jewish invasion. You add your final score to the date of Aunt Hester's marriage, divide by the square root of 21, and multiply rapidly. This, with a dash of nutmeg, will reveal an amazing total, sometimes.

If you have followed closely my every direction, you are now ready to begin play. For the first three months I advise playing with carefully picked company. Two dolts and the village idiot might do well for a starter.

Food—for Thought

THIS is a highly delightful entertainment without any particular sex-message for misguided flappers, and it is probably quite untrue to life, for which in these days we should be thankful. The moral of the play appears to be that a young woman reared in humble circumstances can be just as large-hearted as any member of our old nobility; and as nobody ever said she couldn't, there is nothing to argue about. We have, first of all, Lord Crayle (Mr. Allan Aynesworth), the typical aristocrat of the novelette, in great distress because his son and heir, Lord Teylesmore, has become engaged to a play-actress, and positively wants to marry the girl. Lord Crayle has at once convened a council of the Family in order to try to get an idea of what can be done to avert the crushing disaster.

LORD TRENCH (a delightfully nonsensical part played by Mr. Fred Kerr) has only one course to advise. Offer the girl money to call it off. This advice he repeats so often that Lady Trench (Miss Gertrude Kingston), whose tongue is on the vinegary side, tells her husband that if that is all he can say, he had much better keep quiet. His lordship in reply urges his lady to "Shut up!"—an appeal which is not only bad form, but which sadly ignores the fact that the age of miracles is past. The head of the Family is the Duke of Warrington, who is himself not a pattern of morality, since he has been for the last four years going about (blessed euphemism!) with another man's wife. But he is present at the gathering to give the Family the benefit of his advice and rosy experience of life. Young Lord Teylesmore has been invited to attend as the defendant in the action, as it were, and on his arrival the Family are pained to hear that he has brought his actress with him.

ELSIE HILARY is the lady's name, and she proves to be well-behaved; but this is a complaint with many of our actresses to-day. The time has gone by when the appearance at Bow Street of a lady "described as an actress" created an unfortunate impression. Miss Hilary is at first received in stony silence, the author wishing us to believe, apparently, that our aristocracy is so ill-bred that it can think of nothing to say to a lady of another class who happens to have been suddenly thrown among them. Miss Hilary is therefore called upon to give the noble company a lesson in breeding. She starts the conversation by quietly inviting Lord Crayle to state his reason for objecting to her as a possible wife for his son. Incidentally, she left Town before she could get a bite of anything to eat, and this affords a good excuse for getting her out of the room while the Family discuss her future.

AND just as the Family, acting on the advice of the Duke, have decided to keep Miss Hilary among them as a guest so that she may see enough of her rather vapid young man to make her heartily tired of him, a delightful anti-climax is provided by the arrival on the scene of Mr. James Hilary, her father. Mr. Hilary is a rather vulgar and pushful person, and he comes to the point at once. He has reason to suppose that his daughter, the great Elsie Hilary, is thinking of marrying a member of Lord Crayle's Family. He begs and implores that Lord Crayle will do what he can to avert this calamity. Mr Hilary is, he says, not a rich man, but he is prepared to pay anything within reason to compensate the Family for releasing his daughter from this very undesirable engagement.

A MOMENTARY compromise is effected by having both father and daughter as guests at Lord Crayle's house. At the end of a month we find that the Duke is getting rather tired of the other man's wife, who cannot free herself by divorcing her husband because he is a chronic invalid, and is not therefore in a position to furnish the usual incriminating hotel bill. On the other hand, the Duke is distinctly taken with Elsie Hilary, and for his sake she throws Teylesmore over without a pang, and tells the Duke that she loves him as she has never loved before. And she is just settling down to the comfortable idea of becoming the Duchess of Warrington when the news comes over the wireless that the husband of the Duke's lady friend is dead, and the obvious inference is that the Duke will now be free to marry the lady, since she has been his Duchess in all but name for some time past.

BUT the Duke does not propose to abandon Elsie. After all, I suppose it is a fair assumption that if a lady will be unfaithful to one husband she may well prove unfaithful to another, since we are all creatures of habit. And the Duke would naturally prefer a wife that he can keep to himself. Elsie Hilary is endowed with the rare and distinctive quality enjoyed by Cæsar's wife, and the Duke asks neither more nor less than that. But it is at this crisis that the shining purity and lofty self-abnegation of the actress become apparent. She tells the Duke that, in spite of her intense love for him, she feels that it is his duty to go back to his mistress. Further, she has arranged to have a "call" put through on the house telephone to Paris, where the other lady is at present staying—and hark! there goes the bell now.

THE Duke takes the receiver, clearly with the view of breaking with the other lady once and for all; but it is soon manifest that he is being out-talked. Now and then, to gain time in order to think up some fresh excuse for his defection, he protests that he cannot hear, or that the wire is out of order; and when he has clearly been pinned down with a leading question he complains that there is something wrong with the exchange. We do not, of course, hear the lady's argument, but we see the Duke gradually being forced against the ropes by her smashing left-handers, as you might say, and as he replaces the receiver with a deep sigh he is clearly down for the count. He undertakes to be in Paris that same afternoon, and Elsie tells him that he has done the right thing, and she will go back to the stage and her two-fifty per week or thereabouts.

THE plot, however, matters very little in a play that is so prodigally crammed with witty dialogue and amusing back-chat. The elderly Lord Trench, being a little old-fashioned, has hitherto declined to look upon the cocktail when it is red (or yellow), but one of his lady cousins assures him that this sort of thing is typical of the Forward Movement in Society, and, coupled with the Black Bottom, is pointing the way to a brighter Britain. Mr. Fred Kerr's initiation into the cocktail habit proves most laughable. Miss Cicely Byrne plays the actress with a pleasing grace; and Mr. Ian Hunter is an agreeable Duke, his play at the telephone being a remarkably able effort. The entertainment is extremely enjoyable from first to last. JINGLE.

PARISIANA

"Unfortunate experience"

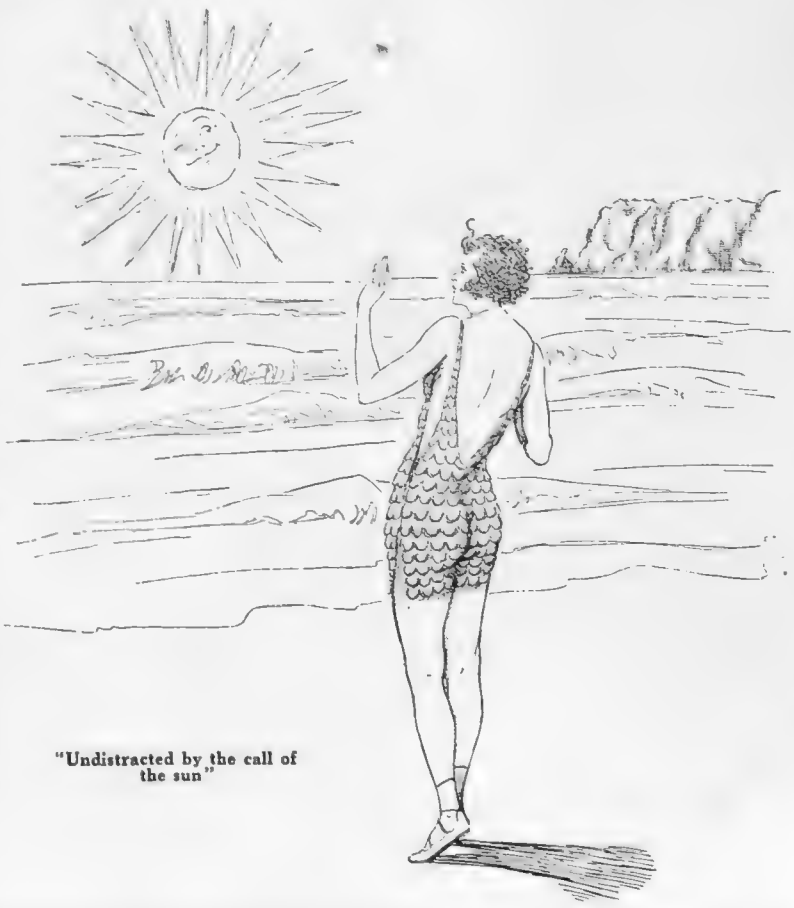
MES AMIS,

WHILE it was summer—by the calendar—there was the consolation that one could look forward to the joys of winter, particularly the theatre. Such a summer seemed particularly promising in respect of good new plays with fresh themes, for there was every inducement to the playwrights of all degrees to put in constant attendance at the desk, undistracted by the call of the sun on the waves or similar temptations of past vacances. Never has there been a winter theatrical season when we have been entitled to expect so much, seeing that there have been several score of geniuses who have been promising wonderful things brimming over with novel ingenuities. All that they lacked (they said) was the opportunity; and this was furnished by the damp.

Eh bien, we have had the first of the new plays, and the novelty of the plot has left us breathless. It concerns a lady who wishes to deceive her husband. So far as the Paris stage goes you could not have anything more startlingly original than that, could you? It is a theme absolutely unknown to the theatres of the boulevards. A season which starts with such a brilliant departure from the outworn and the hackneyed is obviously going to be perfectly marvellous in shocks and surprises.

STILL, perhaps it were better not to be too severely exacting at the start. The season may reserve us some new topics for drama and comedy. And, if the worst comes to the worst, we are going to have greyhound racing in Paris shortly, so we shall be able to get a new thrill from the dogs. But it does seem peculiar that these Paris playwrights, who affect such a scorn of the London stage, should show themselves utterly unable to devise a plot apart from the "eternal triangle," the possibilities of which were thoroughly exhausted before most of them were born.

EITHER a most extraordinary number of Parisians have become hard up simultaneously or motoring has sustained a bad set-back during the holidays, for never have so many second-hand cars been offered for sale as during the past week or two. Granted that it has been far from pleasant motoring weather, but the mauvais temps scarcely seems sufficient to account for this extensive eagerness to dispose of automobiles which, in many instances, have only run for a few weeks. Maybe a lot of new drivers have had unfortunate experience with pannes, which is, of course, calculated to kill enthusiasm.



"Undistracted by the call of the sun"

IT is extraordinary how differently luck falls in the matter of pannes. Three of us, intimate friends, recently left Paris for corners of France far distant from each other. My record was three pannes in four weeks, none of them very serious, but each might have been intensely irritating had I been in the wilds when it occurred, as a skilled mechanic was necessary every time. But on every occasion I was just in front of a garage in one small town or another. I am, therefore, in a state of neutrality, appreciating that, for motorists also, it is better to be lucky than handsome.

THE second of the trio is now flatly against motor tour holidays, and wants to get rid of his burden. He had stopped his car at the top of a mountain road in the Jura in order to drink in the joys of the point de vue, and, happening to turn round, saw it was beginning to run down the slope, the hand brake having slipped. He sprinted, but was a shade too late, and all that he could do was to turn the steering wheel so that the car should run into the banked-up side of the road instead of careering over the edge of the precipice on the other side. Even then, the damage was so severe that spare parts were necessary, which had to be demanded from Paris, and, naturally, they did not arrive before the tour was due to terminate, the holiday having to be completed in a very dull village.

"'Yes, you have,' insisted the boy"

YET the third man insists there is nothing like a panne for discovering new and old friends. He had a breakdown among the vineyards in the Rhone Valley. Looking over the wall of the nearest farmhouse he saw the family engaged in gathering the grapes. He went in and said, "Père, I want to borrow a rope to get my car towed to the nearest town." "Certainly," said the farmer, "but first I should like you to taste my wine. Come into the house." They went in; the wine was excellent, and my friend said so. The farmer insisted that he should have another glass, and then another. After a while my friend realised that the vine-grower was delighted to get the opportunity to escape from the labour of the vineyard and make a fête of the occasion. He reminded him of the rope.

TOGETHER they went to a shed and selected one, then waited at the door. Soon a motor lorry came past, and the farmer called to the two men on the seat, "I want you to tow my friend's car to the nearest town." (He himself did not know what its name was, as he had never been.) The men readily consented, and immediately the farmer said, "I should like you to taste my wine." They jumped at the opportunity, and another four "rounds" had passed before my friend was able to influence an onward move. Then he learned that he was being conveyed to Avignon. He was dropped at the first garage, the men of the camion refusing to accept any payment for the towing.

THE patron of the garage sighted, he was an old friend of the "Rugger" field. He was not, however, the agent for the make of car involved, and did not stock the required spare parts, but he personally towed him along to the principal agent. There the other proprietor took personal charge of the matter, called up five men to help, and in little more than an hour they had had the best part of the motor down and remounted it, having put in two new valves and a new section of the magneto, which had been smashed when the valves broke away. And at the end he refused to accept any payment except for the men's time!

"While it was summer—by the calendar"

HERE is a little story which, I am quite aware, sounds too good to be true, but to any doubters I can supply names and address. A ten-year-old English boy who lives in Paris had become intensely enthusiastic over butterfly collecting. His birthday was nearing, and he happened to pass through his mother's bedroom. "Mother," he said, as soon as he saw her downstairs a few moments later, "it's awfully good of you to have got that special present for my birthday." "But I haven't bought your present yet," replied his mother, puzzled. "Yes, you have," insisted the boy; "that book I noticed on your dressing-table about butterfly collecting for boys—'Advice to Young Mothers.'" RENÉ.

HUSHED-UP HISTORY—II

William the Silent misses a short putt

Heading by LEO CHENEY

MR. HORRIS ORBOLT sat in the dentist's waiting-room re-reading his own burning words with satisfaction. They looked well in print, much better than they had done in the disjointed notes from which he had made his speech to the Union of Casual Labourers the night before; he murmured the resounding periods aloud :—

"I stand here in the cause of Unskilled Labour; the downtrodden Cinderella among Unions has found a Fairy Godmother, I hope and trust, who may be able, if not to turn its pumpkin into a golden coach, at least to provide a sufficiency of milk for the child and mother, of beer for the bread-winner, and place the casual labourer on a golden-slippered footing with the Ugly Stepsisters of Capital and Skill. (Loud cheers.)"

As Mr. Orbolt repeated "Loud cheers," a flush of pleasure rose to his right cheek; his left was already pink with toothache.

How the Casual Labourers had cheered, how furiously the leaders of the Press slated Mr. Orbolt's effort this morning, and how eminently satisfactory was all this publicity to an agitator who would lose his own golden footing if he ceased to agitate both the Voter and the Press.

The pleasure of reading had put from his mind the pain in his jaw, but now it was recalled to him by the arrival of a neat nurse, who announced that Mr. Large, the dentist, was waiting.

Mr. Orbolt dropped The Times and got up heavily; he was not brave, but between two evils he was always ready to seize the lesser—let the dentist take it out, for he must be able to speak again to-night.

He found the dentist washing his hands.

"Good morning," he said with the gruesome cheeriness which seems to be an indispensable part of dentistry. "Speaking again, I see, last night, Mr. Orbolt. I suppose you mean all that you say? "

"Every word comes from my heart," said Mr. Orbolt mechanically and a little absently. "I suppose I can have gas? "

"Gas? " said the dentist winding up the chair. "Open a little wider, please, and let me have a look."

He slipped a gag into the patient's mouth and peered into the open orifice.

"H'm," he said thoughtfully. "Do you know, Mr. Orbolt, that your last speech has quite converted me to your views. Wonderful thing the persuasive power of words. What is skill when all's said and done? Yes, we must have that one out."

With a deft movement he strapped a broad band of webbing round Mr. Orbolt's body and the chair back. Then he picked up a sort of mask of cotton fitted upon a rubber tube. He rang a bell behind him and gave a few instructions in a low voice to the nurse who answered, then went behind the chair. Horrible puffing noises began, but the dentist didn't stop talking.

"You're a little bit down on skill, aren't you? " he went on pleasantly. "Well, as I say, perhaps you are right. It has taken me many years to learn my business, but I suppose, as you say, any amateur should have an equal chance of taking out that tooth." He pressed one hand over Mr. Orbolt's mouth, and added, "It will be an interesting experiment."

"Ahburgh! " said Mr. Orbolt violently. "Eggeeoh! " He writhed against the band, but it remained secure, binding his arms to his sides and his back to the chair.

"Yes," said Mr. Large. "Yes, I have a son, a boy of fourteen—of course, it may not be a fair test since he has played at being a dentist ever since he was a child, but I imagine you won't object to that much practice? "

"Emeeguck ooouneh," gurgled Mr. Orbolt.

"If I were to do this extraction," went on the dentist, "I should charge you a guinea; as it is, it will cost you nothing; you shall tell me at the end whether my skill is overpaid. It is a pity you cannot have gas, but it is only fair that you should be awake to judge for yourself. This is my son."

Mr. Orbolt, who was trying to slip downwards from his bonds, had a vision of a scrubby schoolboy with red hair and a wide grin; he remembered suddenly just such another youth who had taken advantage of two years' seniority to torment him throughout his schooldays. It came upon him with sickening certainty that here was one whom humanitarianism would not move.

"We had better tie his legs," said Mr. Large to the boy. "Now you understand, that is the tooth—just get hold of it firmly with these forceps and give one sharp tug; or more if necessary."

Mr. Orbolt felt the cold steel of the forceps against the side of the tooth, he gave a muffled yell, then a sharp pain grew in his jaw. His staring eyes could see nothing but the fiendish face of the boy bent over and apparently gloating upon his agony.

For one moment it seemed as if he was hanging on to the edge of space by his tooth, his eyes shut as he gasped with pain. Then far away and faintly came the voice of the dentist.

"It's all right, Mr. Orbolt. It's all over. Don't worry. A very neat extraction. There, thank you." Then in lower, more confidential tones, "It's only the gas, he'll be round in a moment."

He opened his eyes. There was no boy, no gag. Only Mr. Large, upright and smiling, and the hospital nurse bending solicitously over him.

Mr. Orbolt sat up.

"I thought—I felt——. Did you take it out yourself?" he asked between dabs at his mouth.

"Of course," said Mr. Large.

"Good Heavens! I thought——"

"Gas always gives one funny dreams," said the dentist soothingly. "There. Now you'll be able to make another of your great speeches tonight."

Mr. Orbolt looked at him sombrely.

"I don't know about that," he said.

Brooding on a new aspect of the Labour problem, he left. When the outer door had shut behind him, feeling sore, he crossed the street and hailed a cab; he was turning to open the door when he looked up at the waiting-room window.

Over the lower painted panel of glass a face was staring at him, the real, human grinning face of a scrubby schoolboy with a gloating expression and a head of ruddy hair.

SEE YOU AT THE PALACE!

MISS PEKE

By "THE KENNELMAN"

To-day and to-morrow (28th and 29th) will see all the most keenly doggy people in Britain (and many from the Continent and America) forgathering under one roof: that of the Crystal Palace, for the opening of the Kennel Club's 66th annual Dog Show: easily the most important and interesting event of its kind in the world. Nearly eighty separate breeds of Dogs, close upon a thousand separate classes in which prizes of very many thousands of pounds will be awarded—what a stride from the first Dog Show, held in Newcastle in 1859, when sixty entries were regarded as spelling success for the novel experiment of an exhibition of Dogs! There are now some fourteen hundred per annum in this country alone.

But the prizes to be won to-day and to-morrow at the Palace, though totting up to so big a figure, are not much considered in terms of £ s. d. It's the honour and kudos that counts; and, no matter how many thousands of Shows may be held elsewhere, there remains a certain prestige in a Kennel Club Show award which nothing else quite equals. By the same token, there are famous Dogs to be seen at the Palace this week that are shown nowhere else; just as there are doggy experts of all ranks, from wage-earning kennelmen and gamekeepers to members of ducal households, to be met with at the K.C. Show, and at no other. It is indubitably the biggest doggy event of the year (Cruft's, in February, comes next), and the admirer of Dogs who misses it will miss the most important that even the K.C. has ever staged, and a uniquely interesting opportunity of adding to his doggy lore. No other occasion equals a K.C. Show for picking up tips and information about Dogs.

"The Kennelman" would be sorry to crab the plans of any intending seller, but his own personal tip is that no Show furnishes the ideal place or occasion for Dog choosing or buying. But this week's Show is ideal for certain other ends: making appointments with owners and breeders to visit their kennels to inspect, choose, and buy; studying the latest standards in points and type in every breed; gathering information as to the care and handling and training of Dogs, feeding, breeding, which strains are turning out the finest specimens, etc. And if Dogs don't now play any very interesting part in your life, that's all the more reason why you should hie you to the Palace to-day or to-morrow, for you can learn a lot there about many good and jolly things you have been missing; and, after all, it's just possible—though surely not very likely!—that in the next life there may be no Dogs. An unnecessarily gloomy thought? Well, anyhow, it's a thousand pities to miss full enjoyment of 'em in this.

"The Kennelman" was sent for by a neighbour the other day to observe certain workings of the mind of a jolly little three-year-old Pekingese bitch. This is part of her day's routine: At tea-time she goes, with the cucumber sandwiches and the tipple of her native land, into the master's study, and there usually remains till she accompanies him to the dining-room for his (and her) evening meal. The signal that dinner is served reaches him in the form of an internal telephone ring from kitchen quarters. It comes at a few minutes after seven. Near by there's a church clock, always a little fast; in the study there's a grandfather, pretty much on Greenwich. "The Kennelman" and the master were chatting; Miss Peke was fast asleep in her own special little tub—which once contained a growing palm, and is now half-filled by a cushion. The church clock began to chime the hour. Miss Peke leapt from her tub, rushed through the open window to the balcony, and stood to attention, listening keenly to the strike. The moment it ceased she pranced back into the room and stood fluttering her petticoats at the foot of the grandfather clock. In due course grandpa wheezed thoughtfully and then struck. Precisely as the seventh stroke fell Miss Peke pirouetted and rocking-horsed across the study to its writing-table, where the 'phone stands. There she posed, like a bit of sculpture from Cathay, immovable for a good three minutes. Then the buzzer tinkled, and in that instant the little lady streaked across to the door, pawing delicately at its portière, head swung over her mane to the left, round eyes fixed commandingly upon the master. She didn't actually say: "Come, come! Cut the cackle!" but a garden slug couldn't have missed her meaning!

GLOBE AND OTHER TROTTINGS

By YOGO HAMA Illustrations by OKUN INGAMAI

Most Dear Hon. Bystanders,

My fingers tremble for horror as I again unfurl my pen to depict further extractions from my non-equalled and excelless diary. It seems to almost be more as impossible that I have succeeded to survive fightings, cataclysmics and a 1,000 and 1 other and more awful terrors eminently sufficient to irretrievably kill a mere mediocrity person of the genus homo. I can only imagine to suppose that it are my defunctless and squenchless spirit and nil desperandum which have caused me to non-succumb to these non-paralleled catastrophics. More as a 1,000 times be it from me to execute modestless blasts on my private trumpet as do the talentless ignoramus persons who live for only publicities and suchly cultureless perks, but a genius cannot succeed to always keep his candle in a bushel like as the bashful violet and other timid vegetables. I trust to therefore hope I shall not be accused to possess more as my legal share of legitimate pride, when I boldishly declare that more as 1 in a 1,000 literati would have entirely succumbed for terror to ½ the horrors and perils which I have so heroishly embattled face to face. Thusly, before continuing my extractions, I feel it are my duty to quote you the Hon. Bishop of —— in 1 of his preachings to Hon. British Association per recently:

"Are it not a frightfully uplifting thought (preached Hon. Bishop) to think that we still succeed to produce sublime and conquerless souls which hesitatelessly plunge themselves into the trackless and horrible wilds in order to purvey us new and priceless facts? When I observe to witness the 100s of faces, masc and femn, listening to my words with all ears, I ask myself if perhapsly after all, Hon. Sir late Darwin did not succeed to hit the correct nail when he discovered to find that more as 95% of persons had monkeys for their parentals. And then, all of a suddenly, from out of the darkest Transatlantic continents and environs, we hear of 1 whose heroish and defunctless deeds prove to show that man are a spirituous animal and not a fruit of the chimpanzee or other arboreal quadrapetals. I refer to Prof. Yogo Hama, Mus. Bac., whose epochal explorings and discoverings are causing the world to gasp for astonishments at. Could a person whose Hon. ancestors leapt themselves on their tails from branch to branch, perform such parallelless deeds? No, I repop, 10,000 times no!

"It are men like as Prof. Y. Hama who constitute the salts of the earth and make it a more and more better place to live in because of their so great genius and so trepidless courage which, with their pious and bashful modesty, must cause innumerous of us here to blush for shame. In his pure and parallelless prose, Prof. Hama shows he can handle his pen so fluently as he handles his pistol and carving-knife. I trust to hope that not any member of the B.A. has succeeded to miss saidly Prof's epoch-breaking depictions, which are questionablelessly more valuable as 99.09% of the skientific tripes enunciated to us by M's and other learned D's. I hesitatelessly remove my cap to Prof. Hama, 1 oz. of whose silents are worth more as tons of erudite verbosities and who, when he opens his mouth, refrains successfully from putting his feet in it, but very to the contrary. Would to goodness gracious that we had succeeded to produce more pure and opagueless intellects like his, for we should nondoubtlessly then be better and greater men.

"Permit I should also purvey a word or 2 of praise to Hon. Bystander which, thanks to Prof. Y. Hama, are now come to be regarded as 1 of the most leading and up-to-dateish skientific journals and a foremost leading authority on the flora and fauna of Arabia, Hottentotland, Hail Columbia and other hithertoly unknown spots. I tremble for fear to contemplate that, but for this heroish journal, the epochal, amazing, parallelless and priceless investigations of Prof. Hama might not have ever succeeded to find the light of day. It are suchly men who cause us talentless and common-clay persons to feel we are less as worms

YOU see, Mr. B. started things by telling Mrs. B. that anything that would keep drinks really cold in muggy weather like this, was the best thing he'd met in years. And Mrs. B., careful soul, said yes, rather doubtfully, she'd ask her hostess about it.

But when she found out what Frigidaire saved them every month in preventing waste of food—how they never had any bother with the children's milk, or the week-end joint going off because it was not cooked till Monday, she became interested.

And as she saw every day how Frigidaire helped her hostess in a hundred ways — always providing ice and ice cream and iced soups and coffees, keeping the meat and milk, cream and eggs, butter and fruit and vegetables in such perfect condition right through the week, and all without any fuss or attention, and at the cost of only a penny or two a day, she could hardly wait till she got back to town.

A Frigidaire cabinet now adorns her kitchen—a thing of beauty in its gleaming white porcelain and highly plated metal. Is there one in yours? It's so easy to have Frigidaire now, thanks to the exceptionally easy terms available. Better write a postcard like Mrs B's above, now. Or the coupon below will save trouble.

in a bud, yet encourage us to strenuously water our sparks of genius so they may flame up like burning fires and leave our footprints on the sands of time." (Frightfully prolonged applauses.)

Dr. ——, R.S.V.P., the so noted authority on the psychical pathologics and other distinguished lepidoptera, said that Hon. Bishop of —— had eschewed almost the very words from his mouth. Prof. Hama's classic magnum opus "Globe and Other Trottings" had succeeded to completely capsize some of our most esteemed theories and other hypothesi, just as Hon. Sir Einstein had proved to show that gravity did not hit Hon. Sir late Newton on the head with an apple. Prof. Hama had made 9-pins of innumerous cherished beliefs re concerning foreign spots and non-doubtedly he was not only an A.1 and copper-bottomed literati at Lloyds, but a very top-hole skientist. He trusted to hope that saidly Prof. would grow to become a member of the B.A. because of his so enormous and stainless reputations. He proposed to remove a vote of thanks to Editor of Hon. BYSTANDER for succeeding to discover and display 1 of the most ripest and profoundish geniuses which had ever trod its pages.

"Gravity did not hit Hon. Sir late Newton on the head with an apple"

"I do not hesitate to doubt (continued Dr. ——) that however enormous sums Prof. Hama are in the receipts of—though he are tons of miles above caring for dibs and suchly mundane perks—they cannot succeed to adequately recompensate his so wonderful labours and awful sufferings in order to depict us the brilliant and disputeless truths which he has enjoyed such pains to procure. His words would be cheap at 1,000£s per each, including the full-stops. A semi-colon uttered by Prof. Hama speaks more as volumes and are worth its weight in gold or other precious stones." (Cheers and uproars.)

I enormously regret that, because of its so paltrish envies and jealousies, the daily Press has non-reported the a b o v e l y proceedings, thusly necessitating I should publish same in Hon. BYSTANDER for the benefits of my 100s of 1,000s of admirers. Nextly week I shall return to my exclusive extractions which, I guarantee to warrant, will cause my inspireless contemporaries and other ignorami to s u f f e r excruciating fits and suchly spleenish distempers when they read.

"LOVELINESS"

Every Woman's Birthright

EVERY woman is born with a skin that is clear and delicate. Some women keep this natural delicacy until late on in their lives. Others lose it early; their skin becomes sallow and coarse, marred by blemishes—why? Either because of general ill-health or because they have failed to keep their skin in a clean healthy condition. The regular use of Pond's Two Creams is all that is necessary to preserve or restore the natural loveliness that lies in every woman's skin.

At night—and whenever your skin feels tired or dusty—cleanse with Pond's Cold Cream. Its fine oils will penetrate the pores and bring to the surface all dust and impurities. After every daytime cleansing, wipe off the Cream and finish with Pond's Vanishing Cream to give a lovely surface and to hold your powder.

Smooth Pond's Vanishing Cream lightly over your face and hands before going out of doors and on every other convenient occasion to keep the skin soft and white and prevent sun, wind and dust from marring its delicacy. It is exquisitely scented with Jacqueminot roses, is wonderfully refreshing and instantly makes you look your best.

From all Chemists and Stores. In handsome opal jars, 1/3 and 2/6. In tubes, 7½d. (for handbag) and 1/-. Pond's Cold Cream also in extra large jars 5/-, and in extra large tubes 2/6.

Do We Really Run Things?

By Blanchette Illustrations by HELEN McKIE

LONDON, Sept. 26.

DEAR COUSIN,

Do women really run things so terrifically, I wonder? So thoroughly and completely and tyrannically I mean, as some of the men writers and people make out in books and plays, and those nice long articles in the Sunday papers that so wonderfully discuss all the great affairs of life like the Bolshie Menace and Is England Utterly Degenerate? and the Corrupting Influence of Modern Drama, and so on. Mostly just a bit or shade on the pessimistic side these eloquent and inspired persons are, you'll notice, but then, I suppose, after all that must be how they feel about it, and anyway, ever so much more arresting than just saying everything in the garden's lovely, what?

LIKE in a play I've just been seeing, called The Silver Cord, at the St. Martin's, where it's a mother, most marvellously played by Lilian Braithwaite, who utterly bosses and battens on her sons, so to speak. Ties them to her apron strings, as the old saying goes, and then when one marries and the other's going to, she works and fights as hard as she can to get 'em apart from wife and fiancée, and all but wins all round. And not from any real affection, it isn't, that she does all this, mark you, but just the sort of idea of having power and not bearing to let anyone else run things. Which I dare say there are women like that, and have known one or two domestic vampires myself. But what I do rather doubt is if the men'd let themselves be led by the nose quite that way, as you might say.

MEN are weak, of course, but not so really weak, meseems, as they think they are, or women so strong. Those are two of the great illusions, you know, that are simply frightfully in the mode just now. Both invented by men, but inspired, p'raps, and certainly encouraged by women—some women, anyway. Men are childish, sans doute, bless their little hearts. Just tell them you're wonderful in the right words, or no words at all, and they'll believe it, anyway if your nose and ankles are the right size and shape (not to mention any of the rest). And inoculate 'em with that inferiority-complex and they'll fall for it—up to a point. But when he's tried really too high, methinks the Caged Lion just yawns and stretches and shoves the bars away with a casual push of his large paw and strolls off while the celebrated Woman Tamer weakly wilts.

HE bolted, too, the Principal Son in this play I've been talking about, but only in a shamefaced sudden way, while the weaker brother stayed behind, spite of his altogether delightful fiancée having tried to make a hole in the ice when he chucked her. But as a matter of fact, I don't believe that'd have happened, not for one single moment. Charming, clinging, and detestable Mother, when the crisis came, would have had her clinging arms firmly removed and been quietly but decisively put away in her corner by her married son (especially as Clare Eames was his wife). And even the weakling brother, I'm sure, would have managed to find a perfectly good excuse to slink off somehow and get wed (as the film captions put it) to charming Marjorie Mars.

"The kilt is the noblest dress in history"

NO, dear cousin and sistren and brethren, this monstrous-regiment-of-women idea isn't truly any truer than when (for his own special purposes, no doubt) it was originally invented by John Knox or someone—you know, the man who used to go about solemnly denouncing poor dear Mary Queen of Scots because she flirted a bit and quite possibly was frivolous enough to have a bath once a month. Not sure, in sooth, it mayn't quite conceivably have been invented all over again for a purpose nowadays too. Though not so's to burn us at the stake this time, or chop off our heads at the block, or anything rough and rude like that, but just to keep us quiet. I mean, women do certainly love power, don't they? and men love a quiet life. Positively aching, I'm sure they were, to give us the vote when we used to go about with axes and hammers and smashed all the windows in Whitehall, only their pride wouldn't let them. And when the War happened and quite a lot of us did canteening and other noble deeds, they promptly snatched at the excuse and chucked it at us with loud cries (from such as still survived) of "The women are splendid."

卐

And doing great things with our little vote, too, aren't we? Nearly half-a dozen women M.P.s we've got, with one of 'em a Duchess, and another an actress in her spare time, or, anyway, appearing till further notice (spite of rows and ructions) in that thoroughly quiet and respectable musical show, The Beloved Vagabond. Also a Conservative Government in power, and quite likely to be there for quite a time yet, what's more. And no one ever seems to mind what we do now (except a few Bishops and novelists and people who've got their own publicity to see after), and we can smoke cigarettes everywhere, and even, I expect, if we really wanted to, dance in the Altogether like the Lady Diana of one of the books of the moment, "The Madonna of the Sleeping Car," which is by a Frenchman, but has been translated quite fairly faithfully, meseems—or, anyway, I hope there wasn't much more in the original model thereof.

"Are bus conductors bad mannered"

The things people do say and do in books these days—and ones you get delivered at your own door by the once so wellnigh incredibly virtuous libraries, too. Aforesaid Lady Diana, par exemple, who admits frankly, not to say proudly, a list of her lovers, and is only annoyed because someone suggests they were successive ones 'stead of all in a row as it were. And as for the very latest U.S. affair from the same pure source—well, above-mentioned Lady D. was pure as ice and chaste as snow (Shakespeare) compared with the "heroine" hereof. And as for the men in this really amazing volume or tome—"Fiesta," it's called, by someone called Hemingway—every one of them seems to be a degenerate, and generally drunk at that. (So are quite a lot of them in the old Russian novels, of course, but at least they do talk big ideas and not just bar-counter cross-talk, so to speak). Positively, you know, Elinor Glyn's latest effort, "It," seems almost Charlotte Yonge-ish after it, though not lacking bright and brilliant new thoughts, such as that women are like cats, and immortal phrases like—

"Ah, God!" at last she said divinely.

Yes, honest to goodness, that's really and truly in the book! Also there's another new little volume, called "The Eternal Honeymoon," by Mr. Sewell Stokes, that I wouldn't let grandma read for worlds. . . .

卐

But talking of America and the denizens thereof, perfectly lovely time they've been having over in Paris lately, haven't they, parading all over the place, man, woman, and child, in nice fancy uniforms like the men outside our movie palaces wear. And telling 'emselves and every one once more (or twice or thrice) how they won the War—which has made, am told, local inhabitants of the Gay City even gayer than before. Well, well . . . good Americans, on dit, go to Paris when they die, but the bad ones don't all seem to die when they go to Paris, what? (Copyright reserved in U.S.A.)

Some little touches of humour there are emerging from the Great War after all these years, aren't there, now the merciful years have at least dulled the pain for those whose sun went out and their stars were darkened in those terrible times. Sweetly pretty picture, for instance, of ex-Marshal Hindenburg, once strong-and-silent War Lord, and now peaceful, if somewhat comic President of Hun Repub., telling us all about how frightfully libellous it is even to suggest that Germany started the War, and how with clean hearts (says he) they marched out (by way of Belgium) to defend the Fatherland, and with clean hands (especially in Belgium) the German Army wielded the sword. . . .

But oublions tout ça—or at any rate we can put it right at the back of our minds till next time, these peaceful and rather pleasant autumn days. When splendid sunsets, all blue and gold and orange and crimson, come to thrill us with their glory even at this tail-end of what everyone says is the world's worst in the way of summers. This enchanting climate, as Mr. Sickert the artist puts it, of perpetual autumn—though seeing he's also one of the ones who go in for the cult of the kilt he must find it a shade or spot draughty now and again perchance. And no wonder 'bus conductors, as Mr. Cairns, the magistrate, remarks, are sometimes cross—getting all splashed on their little platforms when it rains, I mean, and asked, I shouldn't wonder, by quite a lot of nice old ladies up from the country to take care of their wet umbrellas, not to mention changing a pound note for a penny fare, and what not.

"If the men would let themselves be led by the nose"

Plenty of pleasant pleasures around, though, after dark, however autumnal the world may be getting. A perfectly good new Dinuit dinner, e.g., they've got at the Troc., which means diner and nuit, and only starts at nine, accompanied by Trocabaret, which s'explique, n'est-ce pas? And there's Chaliapine at the Albert Hall next month in the offing, too, among other October joys.

With love,

Yours ever,

Blanchette.

"The beautiful Child has taken the first prize in the most important Baby Show. Artists have spoken of the photograph as flawless, and as representing the perfection of Childhood.

The World's Most Beautiful Child

His mother, Mrs. M. E. Barnett, says:—"We owe thanks to Virol for the splendid specimen of British boyhood. I took Virol myself before baby was born. Since his birth Virol has been part of his daily diet. He has never had a day's illness, and has always been a joy to behold, good tempered and happy, and always a picture of health. It makes me happy to know he has such a splendid foundation to help him through life and the hardships of schooling."

MAKING A CARD OF RE-ENTRY

By A. E. MANNING FOSTER

THE saving of an entry card in Dummy is a commonplace, and few players of any standing fail to see its importance. But the making of an entry card in Dummy by winning with a high instead of a low card by Z is a finer point which many miss. You know how often it happens that Dummy has a long suit which, although you have established, you cannot get in to make, just because there is no card of entry.

When there is absolutely no card of entry, of course, you can do nothing but grin and bear it, but frequently there is what might be described as a hidden card of entry, if only you are clever enough to see it and avail yourself of it.

Here is a case in point:—

	S.—4. H.—J, 5, 2. D.—K, Q, J, 10, 7, 5, 3. C.—8, 2.
S.—Q, 9, 8, 6. H.—K, 10, 7, 6, 4. D.—A. C.—Q, J, 7.	Y A B Z	S.—J, 10, 7, 5. H.—8. D.—9, 8, 4, 2. C.—10, 9, 6, 5.
	S.—A, K, 3, 2. H.—A, Q, 9, 3. D.—6. C.—A, K, 4, 3.

Score: game all. Y dealt and bid "One Diamond"; B "No bid"; Z "One No-Trump." All passed. A opened the 6 of Hearts. How should Z play the hand?

Whether Z goes game with eleven tricks or only makes the odd depends upon his play to the very first trick. I am open to bet that eight players out of ten would miss the point. They would be pleased at the Heart suit being led up to them and would take the trick cheaply with the 9 of Hearts, and so insure making three tricks in that suit. But now if you study the hands you will see that such a course is fatal. If Z yields to the temptation to take the trick cheaply all he can make is seven tricks, viz., three Hearts, two Spades, and two Clubs. He cannot possibly go game. Dummy's suit of Diamonds is dead. He can never put Dummy in to make it if A plays with ordinary intelligence.

Z's only chance of making game is to use the Jack of Hearts as an entry after clearing the Diamonds. He can do this by taking the first trick with the Queen of Hearts. He then leads Diamonds. A is in the lead and must continue with Hearts or open another suit. It does not matter which he does, Z must win at once and lead a small Heart, and A can in no way prevent Dummy getting in on this or a subsequent round with Jack of Hearts and making the long Diamond, giving Z eleven tricks instead of seven.

You may say: "Could not the same result have been attained by Z taking the first trick with the 9, and then, after establishing the Diamonds, leading the 3 of Hearts?"

Certainly not, unless A played very badly. If Z in the second round of the suit plays a small Heart, A must put up his King. The suit is now effectually blocked by Ace, Queen, which A knows that Z holds.

It is all very simple when explained, but it is little points like this that are constantly missed, even by regular and experienced players. The point at issue is the making of a card of re-entry by taking with a higher card when a lower card would win the trick.

A BYSTANDER among the BOOKS

by Ralph Straus

HAD not Mr. Arthur Roberts been coaxed back to the stage round about his seventieth year the present generation might hardly be aware of his name. Yet, as every old theatre-goer will tell you, he was a very great artist. There was a time when his name was on everybody's lips, and once you had seen him fooling on the stage you could no more forget the sly movements of his features than you could forget Marie Lloyd's smile or the voice of Charles Hawtrey. Arthur Roberts was rather more than an amusing actor; he came to stand for something which had little enough to do with the stage—for, in fact, a new sort of joke directed, generally not without reason, against some too pontifical person. In other words, he invented the "spoof," and thereby had many delectable adventures.

Some of these are recounted in Fifty Years of Spoof (Lane: 12*s.* 6*d.* net), which is much more amusing than are most of the memoirs written by those whose business it is to be funny. Writing in his old age Mr. Roberts shows that he has not said good-bye to his sense of fun. He is pleasantly and properly mellow, but there are moments when the old slyness peeps out. We can enjoy with him the dreadful business of Lady Bancroft and the goats, or the appalling, and even cataclysmic, affair of the boots outside the jury-box, with Gilbert fuming impotently in the wings. It is curious, too, to read of that R.A.M.C. corporal who wanted ten shillings for a song he had written. The song was a great success, and so in after years was its writer, whose name happened to be Edgar Wallace.

Mr. Roberts, indeed, is genial company. He has plenty of good stories to tell, and none that would bring a blush to your cheeks. (But would any of those older ones, which used to be considered so "dreadful"? I doubt it.) He has witnessed immense changes on the stage as well as off, and good-humouredly tells us what he thinks about it all. Incidentally, you will find as a frontispiece a portrait of the author by Augustus John. When the painter comes to write his memoirs Mr. Roberts proposes to return the compliment.

NOVELISTS are often accused of inventing the most impossible wills, and it is quite true that many a good story would never have been told without a little improbability in that respect. But the fancy of the novelist, even in his most bizarre mood, is often surpassed by that of the actual testator, as you may see for yourself if you care to study the records. The most monstrously unfair wills are made every year, and only in the rarest instances will the law set them aside.

I have been thinking about such wills because I have just read and enjoyed Mr. Frank Hird's new novel Chained (Chapman and Hall: 7*s.* 6*d.* net). Here a drama that is as "strong" as it is unusual follows upon a will which at first sight seems to be far-fetched; but the man who made it was a peculiar man, and he found himself in a peculiar position. He was a rake who had long hated his own family, but he was not without family pride. He left a huge fortune to his daughter, but his mistresses were not forgotten, and the conditions under which that fortune could be retained by the family were hard enough.

Jane Derington accepts those conditions. She gives up her chosen work as a designer of gardens, runs the great cattle-farm that her father had loved, and assumes the management of the biscuit factory that had been Derington's for more than a century. But she, too, is out of sympathy with her family, for her mother is a hysterical fool and her brother an amorous wastrel. And everywhere she finds herself up against—sex. Mr. Hird does not mince his words. He has something to say, and he says it boldly enough. Chained, I suppose you would say, is strong meat. Yet it is this very obsession of sex which is responsible for Jane's own awakening and ultimate triumph. It transforms her from a hard, masterful person into a true woman.

But there is more in Mr. Hird's novel than the mere unfolding of a young woman's character. With a skill that commands admiration he has woven the rather scattered strands of his story into a cohesive whole. It is a good human story, painfully outspoken if you will, but honest and, particularly in its later chapters, genuinely moving. Accept the peculiar will—Mr. Hird soon makes you do so—and everything reads like the truth. Chained is a piece of good work, easily the best book that its author has written.

THERE have been histories and studies of the Victorian era in the greatest abundance, and opinion about it is extraordinarily varied. Just now it is fashionable to find fault with quite a number of Victorian virtues, and the heroes and heroines of those days can no longer hope for the unstinted praise that once was theirs. Years hence, however, who knows what the Stracheys of the time will be saying? Meanwhile, if you want to understand the astonishing effects of the Reform Bill of 1832, you should read Mr. O. J. Christie's entertaining book, The Transition from Aristocracy (Seeley Service: 12*s.* 6*d.* net).

Mr. Christie is the pleasantest of guides. He takes the materials for his gaily informative chapters alike from fiction or fact. A Victorian himself, he can review the period without bias and with a keen eye for the picturesque. It may be that almost exactly the same ground has been covered before, but Mr. Christie has such apt illustrations at his fingers' ends, and he writes with such good humour, that you cannot but enjoy every one of his pages.

STICKING IT

By "CANDIDA"

ANOTHER young women I know has done it, so she tells me in a letter that's the last word in elaborate paper. No; she hasn't merely married at the precise moment when we're all trying to recover from the financial strain of our holidays. It's much more important than that. She's embarked on a career, and confidently expects the support of her friends, who're offered in exchange "her best attention at all times." One must talk in Rome as Rome talks.

CAREERS are cheap to-day. It's an admirable thing to keep our young women busy. With their very real gifts, their inventiveness, their resource and their boundless energy, they're an asset to the nation. I agree about the gifts. I agree about that boundless energy which, at all costs, must be kept out of the clutches of Satan. London is full of delightful young things with much time on their hands, a little money in their pockets, a sound education behind them, and all of life before them—a life with which they intend to do what they please instead of letting it do what it pleases with them.

"I'VE got to make my way," they say, meaning of course, "I intend to make money." It's absurd to attempt a livable existence on the dregs of the family fortune. There's a nice little car to keep up, a spacious studio to pay for, a studio complete with divans, wonderful cushions and old brocades, friends to entertain, cocktails to dispense, dances to go to, and week-ends, to say nothing of week-middles, to spend in pleasant places. Obviously it can't be done on a pittance, even taking into consideration that lots of them manage to keep up their tremendous vitality on a couple of lettuce leaves and an apple a day.

HENCE Work, a Career in capitals. Nothing so dull, of course, as the daily grind in an office. Success was never chained to a desk answering telephone messages and taking down stupid letters. Success never drudged through the days except perhaps as a transitory means to a brilliant end. "Just to get the hang of things, you see, to know something of the ropes." And then, with a smattering of experience added to one's native intelligence, one starts (backed by the dregs of the family income) to carve out a career.

LITERALLY to carve. Have you ever met anything successful that didn't have to hack its way to the front? Carve, hack or climb, it's all equally strenuous. The top of the ladder may be a bed of roses, so to speak, but the rungs are made of the dullest things; things like daily efforts piled on each other, daily denials of oneself, daily disappointments overcome, hopes deferred and still clung to, faiths that go on and on in spite of everything. It's nearly as dull to read about as to live through. Because what we all adore in our hearts is the romance of a ready-made success which wasn't built up bit by difficult bit; a success like his who woke up one morning and found himself famous, so he said. Not that he skipped all the tiresome things aforesaid, but as he owed it to life to be a figure of romance he didn't mention them.

IT'S only in ridiculous old novels that one leaps into fame with nothing behind one to jump from. Of course our young women haven't read them. Of course they'd hate to think that with all their savoir-faire and frightfully modern point of view they hadn't got beyond the old, idiotic longing for romance. If they but knew it, no one has; no one ever will. The romance of getting something for nothing and the longing for it is as old as this lazy old world, and as young as the youngest creature in it.

I KNOW a talented young person of three-and-twenty who's had at least three brand-new careers in as many years. She started with a guest-house with quaint rooms upholstered in a chintz one hadn't met before, and delightful little dinners, and all went merrily for a month or two. And then, after a bout of servant troubles and house repairs and tiresome people to be attended to, she ran away. She could afford to run—thanks to the dregs of the family income. In Italy and in Greece she consoled herself, and finally came back full of enthusiasm and trunks—full of lovely things.

WHY not an antique shop? And an antique shop it was. She had taste, she had ability: but in the end it was a bore to be taken in by people who knew more about the tricks of the trade than one did oneself, and go unpaid by nice ones who ought to have known better.

TO-DAY it's a dress shop. I've had a command to attend a "show of original Paris models," and I know they'll be terribly alluring. There will be a show-room of old vellum and gold, a bunch of the prettiest girls, the sweetest frocks, the nicest tea. But I give the career just long enough for her to discover that the woman who pays is thin where she ought to be fat, and fat where she ought to be thin, and that she expects to look like the goddess she is not instead of the drab that she is. Who could stick such a life? No one who's got gifts, who's seen most things, and knows some more. Accordingly, she doesn't stick it. And it seldom dawns on her that it's sticking it that matters. To succeed one has to give to the work of one's choice the whole of one's heart and time and intelligence. Don't you believe it when people talk of success that's thrust upon them. The gods are no haphazard givers. You pay for their gift of success with the work of your days and the insomnia of your nights.

Most owners are impressed with the necessity for sticking to the grade of lubricant recommended for their cars. But how many of them realise that the same principle applies to sparking plugs, only more so? For every different grade of oil there are ten or fifteen different sorts of sparking plug by the one maker. Take the K.L.G. range, for example. In this there are over 150 different types available for the various makes of cars, motor cycles, aero and marine engines, etc. The reason is that conditions in the cylinder heads of various engines differ enormously. Some engines run fairly cool but sling a lot of oil about. At the other end of the range is an engine that runs so hot that any ordinary type of plug points would quickly become incandescent.

So at one end of the long range of types is a plug that will spark when practically immersed in oil; at the other end is one that will stand the maximum of heat. But you cannot have the maximum of both the oil-resisting and the heat-resisting qualities in one plug. The plug that suits any particular engine is a compromise between one extreme and the other, according to the conditions of that engine—the temperature at which it runs normally, the compression ratio, the amount of oil normally present, the carburation, average speed, and so forth.

When a new engine appears and the K.L.G. people are asked for a plug to suit it, they first consider these factors and choose some point in the range that would seem to be about right. They can then tell by the behaviour of the plug in service whether it is right or wrong, and can judge by its appearance after use in what direction the choice should be modified i.e., whether more of the heat-resisting or oil-resisting capacity is called for; and in choosing the next plug for trial they move up or down the range, according to indications. Plugs that will stand up to extreme temperatures are useless for normal engines, because they run so cool that the petrol and oil vapour settling on them is not dried up rapidly enough at first, and they begin to "short" within a few revs. Plugs that quickly get hot enough to dry off this vapour as fast as it settles—at comparatively low engine temperatures—are obviously not the type to stand extremes of heat, e.g., in a high compression sports engine.

It is remarkable how a slight modification in one direction or the other will affect the ignition in a given engine. This shows the paramount importance of buying exactly the right type for your particular engine, and not just buying any old plug the garage man happens to offer you. If your engine is not normal—for instance, if the pistons and

THE MOTOR SMASH AT THE TANK

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ECHO."

Sir,—I have just received a paper with an account of the motor accident at the Tank about 11 a.m., June 2nd, and shall be glad if you will publish this letter. The lady driving the Austin car saw an accident was inevitable, and pulled up. When the motor-cycle and taxi crashed they were a little distance from the Austin. The force of the crash was so great the motor-cycle skidded violently and was flung under the off-side of the Austin, being so firmly wedged it took several men to lift the Austin car off it. At the same time the taxi skidded and hit the Austin car violently on the near side, smashing wind-screen and splitting door and side of car, the whole car being badly wrenched and out of gear. The taxi, after smashing the Austin, continued skidding until it reached the kerb. The frame of the "Triplex" windscreen on the near side was considerably bent by the force with which the taxi struck it; had it been ordinary glass both ladies would probably have been seriously injured.

rings are somewhat slack and a good deal of oil reaches the cylinder head—the type of plug recommended even by the makers may not suit. In such a case it is advisable to write to the K.L.G. people and ask their advice. I did this in the case of my own 9-20 h.p Humber, which is somewhat free with oil, and the plugs they supplied me with completely cured the tendency to oil up.

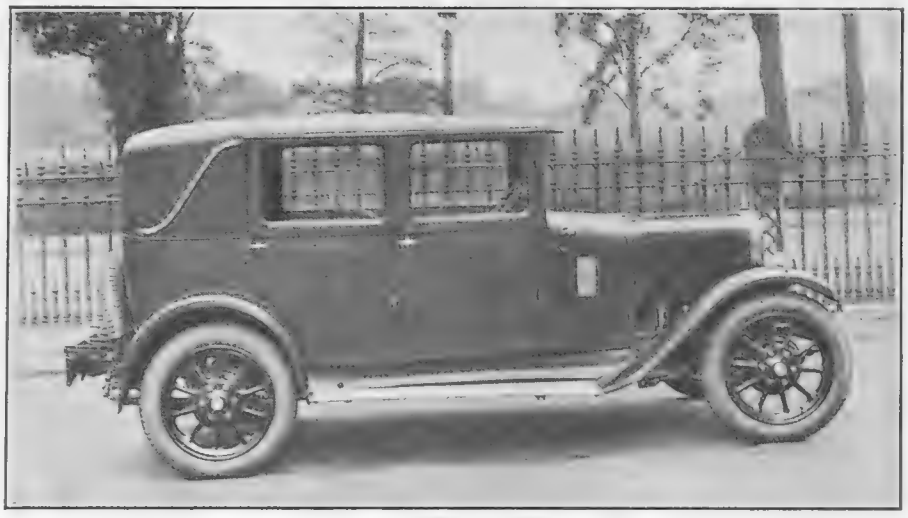
When the General Motors Corporation acquired an interest in Vauxhall Motors, Ltd., some two years ago, there were many shakings of head as to the future of this fine old British concern. Contrary to what one might have expected from various rumours then and since, the well-known board of directors is still there, and no Anglicised Buick or other G.M. product is yet to be seen on test in the streets of Luton. On the contrary, the fine old traditions of this company are emphasised afresh by the new car they are announcing to-day. It is the most important new model that has ever left the Vauxhall factory. It has taken two years to evolve in its final form, and the company has made sure that, before they announced it, deliveries would actually be in progress, and such is the case.



A NEW SALOON

One of the new type of 12 h.p. Austin Weymann Saloons, which embodies many improvements in design, including the new high radiator. The car illustrated is sold by Messrs. Pass and Joyce, of the Euston Road, at the low price of £325

The new Vauxhall is a six-cylinder of 20-60 h.p., with push-rod-operated overhead valves, a four-speed gear box with central control, and four wheel brakes, mechanically operated. Extraordinary care has been devoted to balancing the engine in every way, and the crankshaft is carried in no fewer than nine bearings altogether. Ignition is by Delco-Remy coil and battery. There are nine styles of coachwork, all finished in cellulose. Astonishing changes have been carried out at the works. New machines and methods of handling have been installed, very similar to those used on what is commonly called "mass production." It may be this that has led to the rumours that the new Vauxhall would be in some way a "cheap" job. I do not know the prices at present, but it will surprise me if they are much less than one usually expects from Vauxhall, because there is no sign of cheapness anywhere in the car; it is a quality job from radiator cap to tail lamp That cannot be emphasised too strongly.

A Correction

On page 489 of our issue of September 14 we published a photograph with a caption which stated that Dodson and Shaw were first and second respectively in the Ulster Grand Prix. We have since learnt that we were misinformed and that this race was won by Shaw, riding a Norton motor cycle, and that Dodson was second.

SPECIAL HEATING AND LIGHTING SUPPLEMENT

By MRS. M. VINCE

(Author of "Decoration and Care of the Home")

The Electric House

I HAVE a book written nearly fifty years ago, and called "Hints for Young Householders," the writer of which "prays heartily for that bright day to dawn when the electric light shall be within the reach of all." She describes "the house of Mr. Swan" (whose name remains with us to-day as part of "Ediswan"), "where fairies seem to superintend the lighting." That was what electric light seemed—and no wonder—when it was new.

A "MAGNET" JACOBEAN ELECTRIC FIRE

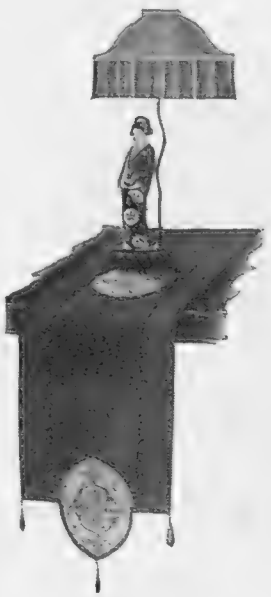
Made by the General Electric Company, this Jacobean mantelpiece, with an electric fire in it, shows that those who have old houses, or period furniture, need not be afraid that they will spoil the appearance of their rooms by using electric fires, which can be adapted to the period desired

The book is full of advice to "Angela and Edwin" (how strange the names sound now!) on how to manage their house, their children and their clothes, their affairs and one another. I wish that the writer could have seen her Angela and Edwin in a modern electric house.

Let us imagine a day in the life of Angela and Edwin (we may as well keep the names) in an electric house. Their maid has left them.

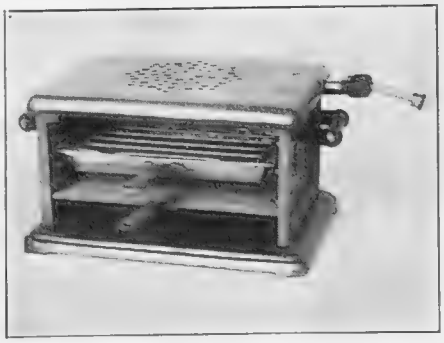
Awakened a little earlier than usual by an alarum, instead of by the arrival of tea, Angela gets up, and with the help of the electric kettle in the bedroom makes tea herself. There is no one to bring her hot water, but what does that matter? There is an electric water heater above the bath. Not until she is dressed does she need to go downstairs. Since the morning is chill, she turns on the electric fire in the dining-room, and the electric pedestal heater in the hall as she passes on her way to the kitchen.

Edwin has now got up, but he requires no hot water, since, besides the electric water heater for the bath, he has his electric shaving-pot. Angela meanwhile is waiting a little impatiently, not because Edwin is late, but because she has got breakfast ready too soon. She has sent up the breakfast things in the electric lift and laid the table. She has fried bacon and eggs on the electric griller, and they are now being kept hot on the electric warming-plate in the dining-room, where the electric kettle waits until Edwin comes, to make the tea, and the electric toaster waits to make the toast. Angela fills in the time by passing the electric sweeper over the stairs.



A HAMPTON LAMP

This lamp, in the form of a Chinese figure, is 25 inches high, with a silk shade trimmed with braid and a silk fringe. It is standing on a reptable-runner, with brocade panels



AN ELECTRIC GRILLER

This "Magnet" Electric Griller, made by the General Electric Company is 10 inches by 9½ inches, will cook a breakfast, frying the eggs and bacon, boiling the kettle, warming the plates and making the toast

Breakfast over, Edwin lights his pipe with an electric pipe-lighter, and goes off in an electric train to his office (where we may leave him until dinner-time). Angela meanwhile has sent the breakfast things down again in the electric lift and popped them into the electric washer, where they washed themselves.

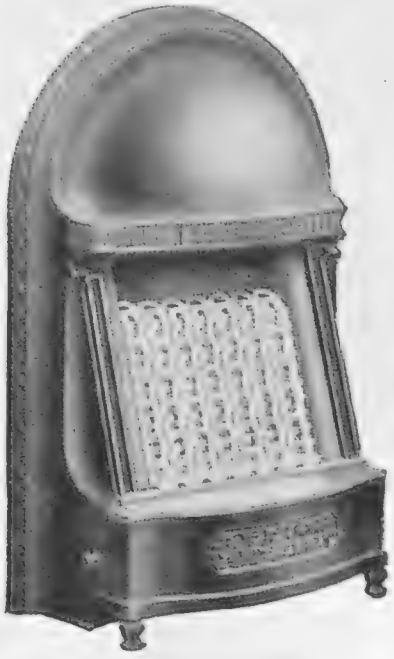
Her one moment of bitterness is when she finds that there is no way of making the beds by electricity, but her good humour is restored by the electric sweeper.

We cannot follow Angela in detail right through her electric day. It must suffice to say that before going out to do her shopping she used the electric iron to iron out her dress which had got creased, that in the afternoon she did some sewing with the electric sewing machine, and that she rang up Edwin (on the electric telephone) to tell him that they need not, after all, dine at a restaurant, as she found she would have ample time to cook the dinner herself on the electric cooker.

So they dined, and Edwin put the things to wash in the electric washer while Angela put the food away in the electric refrigerator. Even their evening was dominated by electricity. Edwin, having had a busy day, decided to listen to the wireless rather than to use the electric lawn-mower, while Angela retired early to wash her hair and dry it with the electric hair-drier, ready to be curled in the morning with her electric tongs.

This may seem to you and me a very commonplace story of a day in the life of a young married couple, but how marvellous it would have seemed to that writer of "Hints for Young Householders" fifty years ago.

THE GAS HOUSE



AN INCLINED GAS FIRE

The gas fires made by the Cannon Iron Foundries have their radiants on the slope, so that the heat is thrown upwards, warming body and face as well as feet

MOST people, if you asked them how many different kinds of fuel they had for warming and lighting their houses, would find it difficult to answer at once, and when they had counted them up would probably be surprised to find how many there were. I felt some surprise when I had made the list for my own house—a coke stove for heating the kitchen and for the water supply; a gas cooker; an anthracite stove for the dining-room; an open coal fire in the sitting-room; gas fires in the bedrooms; electric light; and in reserve candles and an old stove which, after years of idleness, came into triumphant activity last autumn during the coal strike.

There is much to be said for this multiplicity of fuels, but it has its disadvantages. The chief of them is the space needed for storage. When you have to find cellar space for coal, coke and anthracite, so arranged that they do not get mixed, and that each can be replenished without disturbing the others, you realise the chief advantage of having one fuel to do everything.

That is what both gas and electricity rightly claim to be able to do—they fill the house with warmth, light and power, and need hardly any space to do it in; and each year sees them adding something new and ingenious to what they have to offer.

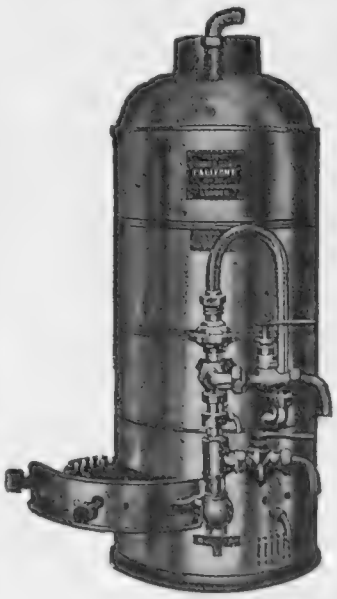
Consider a house which uses only gas. There have been recently great improvements in lighting, apart from anything else. The greatest undoubtedly has been the device by which gas lights, like electric lights, can be worked by a switch from the door. Then there are portable table-lamps, fitted with flexible tubes, and now a new type of burner has been designed which, by heating the gas and air before they reach the nozzle, doubles the light given without increasing the consumption of gas

But lighting is, after all, not the most important of the services of gas. It is as a cooker and a heater that it is principally used. I have recently seen an old house which has been completely equipped with gas. In the kitchen the old kitchener has been removed, and the recess in which it stood and the jambs of the recess have been tiled. In the recess itself is a gas cooker. Against one of the jambs is fitted a gas fire. On one side of the recess is a gas boiler providing hot water for kitchen, bathroom, and a radiator in the hall. On the other side of the recess is an airing and drying cabinet of steel and asbestos, fitted with rails which can be drawn out to receive the clothes. Through this cabinet a current of warm air is passing all the time, drawing the moisture from the clothes and carrying it away through a flue.

The ironing-table in this kitchen is provided with a gas iron, and the scullery has a gas washing-copper. That kitchen makes a very thorough use of gas, but there is yet another thing that could be added to it, and that is the refrigerator, for storing food and for making ice, which is worked by gas. To work it, all that is required is a small gas burner, and a connection with a water-pipe.

There are a number of the smaller things in the home which can also be worked by gas. There are gas cigarette-lighters and gas curling-tongs, gas-heated towel-rails and gas toasters, portable gas heaters in the form of copper bowls, and gas night-lights.

It is surprising that, although geysers are used a great deal for baths, more use is not made of the small geyser in bedrooms. Many bedrooms would have lavatory basins fitted in them were it not for the difficulty of getting hot water to them. The cold water is much easier to bring, and with a geyser that is all that is needed.



EWART'S "CALIFONT"

The illustration shows how from one geyser a supply of hot water can be obtained wherever required, and there is no limit to the supply, which continues as long as the hot water tap is left open

Another important development in gas is its use for central-heating. It is, of course, more expensive than coke, and is intended for those houses where the advantages of its cleanliness and the saving of labour and space more than outweigh the extra cost.

The geyser is no longer a method for getting hot water quickly at one bath or sink only. Messrs. Ewart's "Califont" can now be used to supply all the hot water for a small house. It can be placed in the kitchen and give immediate hot water to the bath and lavatory basin on the floor above, in the same way as an ordinary kitchen boiler.

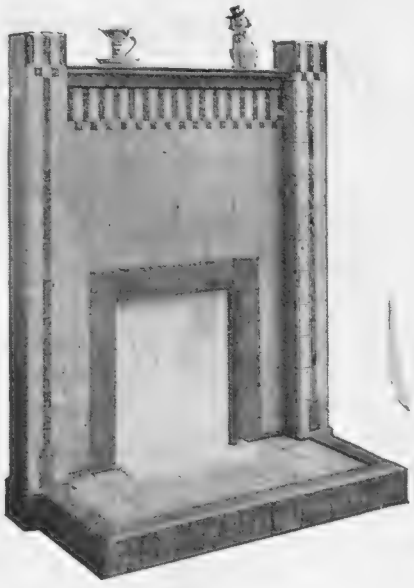
FIRES AND STOVES

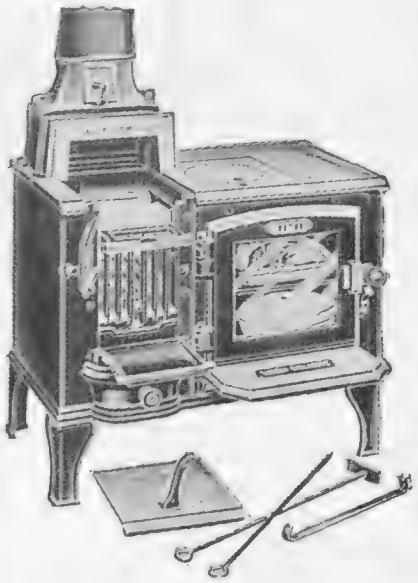


A TILED FIREPLACE

This fireplace of Dutch tiles, made by Messrs. A. Bell & Co., shows how the modern mantelpiece, as well as the modern grate, can be designed on new and original lines

HEATING seems to become more and more complex and the variety of choice more and more bewildering. The obvious way of simplifying it is to go in, as already described, for a single fuel, to have nothing but gas or electricity for all purposes in the house. On the other hand, there are advantages in the variety. The different methods of heating, although they are continually imitating one another and trying to produce one another's effects, all have their special advantages for special circumstances.

If one is to make the best of the different fuels probably some such arrangement as this is best: In the kitchen a gas or electric cooker, with a stove burning coke to heat the water for kitchen and bathroom, and possibly also for a radiator in the hall. This coke stove will also heat the kitchen in the winter, and with the front open



A GLASS-FRONTED COOKER

This latest design of Messrs. Young & Marten is their "Wyem Delight" Range, remodelled and fitted with a glass panel to the oven door, made of a new heat-resisting glass, so that the cooking can be watched without opening the door and letting any of the heat escape makes a cheerful fire. It will burn up all the rubbish, but the one thing it should not be asked to burn is coal, for the soot from coal quickly clogs its flues. Then in the dining-room an anthracite stove which, with the room door left open all night, will help to warm the whole house; in the room where one sits most an open grate burning coal, or one of the new open grates burning coke or anthracite; and in the bedrooms, where heat is wanted quickly, without trouble and only for a short time, gas or electric fires. In an ordinary house

SMOKELESS FIRES

The Glowworm open fire, made by Messrs. O. Bruster & Richardson, combines the advantages of the stove with those of the coal grate, for it burns a smokeless fuel, either coke or anthracite, in an open fireplace, and gives heat without smoke some such arrangement as that gives one the advantage of all the fuels—but one must have the space to store them.

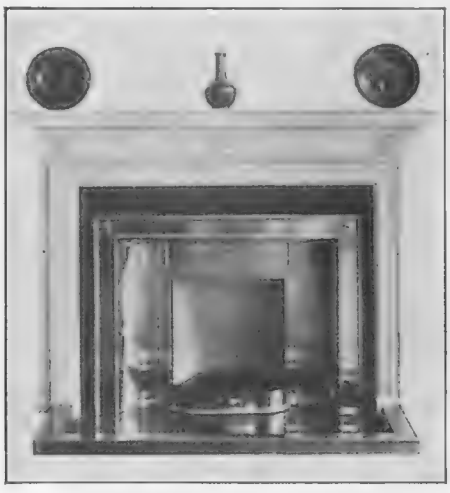
Various as the fires and stoves are, they have one thing in common—that they all aim to give heat with as little expenditure of fuel as possible. With the improved modern coal grates one can keep a room warm with so small an amount of coal as would have amazed our grandmothers, and there are always



THE "HEAPED" FIRE

This is one of Messrs. Bratt, Colbran & Co.'s "Heaped" Fires with a mantelpiece in the Adam style and a beautiful interior of rustless steel new devices being made to help us to economise. Gas boilers, for example, are not only provided with a device by which the gas is turned down automatically when the water is hot, but they have a cut-out valve for reducing the water in the tank during the day, when hot baths are not wanted. Electric cookers are provided with three heats, and a great deal of fuel can be saved by working carefully with thermometer and clock and switching off from full to medium and low at the right time. The latest gas cookers, also, are provided with a device with which, simply by turning a pointer, one can maintain the oven at the temperature required, while the latest type of cooker burning coal has a glass panel to the oven, so that the cooking can be watched without opening the door and letting heat escape.

Again, the makers do their best to help us to keep stoves and cookers clean. The bar-less coal grates not only burn less and give out more heat, but are much easier to keep clear of ash than the older types. Anthracite is one of the cleanest of fuels, and its stoves very rarely need to be raked more than twice a day. The latest gas cookers have detachable burners so that they can be taken off by the cook and cleaned.

AN ANTHRACITE STOVE

The illustration shows a corner of a billiard-room heated by one of the very attractive anthracite stoves made by the London Warming Co.

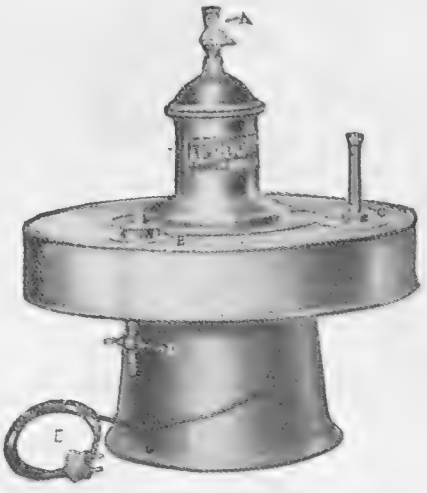
COUNTRY HOUSE LIGHTING, HEATING AND COOKING



MAKING PETROL GAS BY ELECTRICITY
This little machine made by the Aerogen Company needs only to be connected with an electric plug to provide gas for a cooker and two or three fires. It can be switched off in a moment

NOTHING gives one such an idea of the variety of our fuels than the choice open to those who live far away from public supplies of electricity and gas. As a matter of fact, they can even be independent of coal as well.

For such houses there is a choice between electricity, generated by a private plant, acetylene, petrol-air gas, and oil. The electric plant can be run on paraffin or petrol or by a windmill. Acetylene needs no power to generate it, and petrol-air gas plants are worked either by electricity or by weights. None of these three is dependent on coal, and they can make the house independent of it as well, for they can not only light, but also heat and cook. Acetylene can be used for simple cooking as well as lighting; electricity can light, cook and heat; and petrol-air gas also can light, cook and heat in the same way as coal-gas. The special circumstances of any house will determine what choice should be made between these three methods, but a very good combination is to have an electric plant for lighting, and to use it to work a petrol-air gas plant for cooking and heating.

To provide petrol-air gas for cooking and several fires no more is required than a tiny electric motor, similar to the motor of a vacuum cleaner. It uses the same amount of electricity as an ordinary 50-watt lighting bulb, and is connected with the electric supply by means of an ordinary plug point. One of the advantages petrol-air gas is that, if there is no electricity, it can be made by a machine driven by weights. For lighting it is used with mantles, giving a soft clear light, and for cooking and heating it can be used in the ordinary cookers and fires made from coal-gas.

Then for those who do not want to go to the expense of a plant there is always oil, which also can be used for lighting, cooking and heating. In all three, oil now very closely resembles coal-gas. The modern oil lamp, fitted with a mantle, gives a clear white light, while the modern oil stove for cooking works in two ways. It can have wick burners which work like the ordinary oil lamp, but are fitted with an iron plate. This plate, by heating the oil, turns it into gas and spreads out the flame, so that it burns without smoking. It then burns in a rose which resembles a gas burner. Again, heating by oil is different from what it used to be. There are also fires which look like the familiar gas fires, but burn vaporised oil.

MAKING PETROL GAS BY WEIGHT
This machine, made by the Aerogen Co., which can make petrol gas for lighting, cooking and heating, is worked by weights

GAS BY ELECTRICITY

SWITCH ON THE GAS—

For Country Houses with electric supply but no gas, this small and fool-proof Aerogen electric-driven gas making machine has proved a great boon, non-explosive, non-poisonous petrol-gas being instantly available at the turn of the switch. Cooks and Heats as efficiently as coal gas, only cleaner, safer and more hygienic, the running costs being a mere fraction of cooking and heating by electricity.

AEROGEN SAFETY PETROL AIR-GAS IS A REAL LABOUR SAVER

For Country houses having neither electric supply nor gas our well-known Aerogen weight driven automatic petrol gas generators are recommended for COOKING and HEATING as well as LIGHTING.

Fashion's Fancies

The Importance of Furs

WHEN Winter, as he invariably does, lays his icy fingers on us for a brief spell towards the end of September, we realise what an astounding difference both to our comfort and appearance furs make. Fur buying, whatever it may have been in the past, is an annual business to-day. Fashions change more rapidly, every season bringing its own particular styles in peltry as in all else, and also (a fact we often fail to remember), furs nowadays never get a rest in camphor! They are out in all weathers, rushing through the damp air in motors, being permeated with fog in winter and exposed to the dust and sunlight of summer. They are worn winter and summer alike, often, indeed, looking their best in conjunction with a lace or chiffon frock. A fur coat serves as an evening wrap, a practical morning garment, and as the ideal travelling companion throughout the year. The great problem is how to part with it, even for a few days, for the very necessary annual overhaul and for the purpose of remodelling at the beginning of a new season, for, needless to say, the more highly priced furs can easily be brought up to date by a clever furrier and live through not one but many seasons.

The Working and Dyeing of Skins

IN the working and dyeing of skins the art of the furrier has been brought to marvellous perfection to-day, and skins as far removed from each other in quality as moleskin, sheared lamb and coney, are dyed divers shades and sometimes arranged in bands of different colours, which are emphasised by being repeated in the lining. Two furs go to the making of the smartest models. Broadtail, for instance, Fashion's favourite this season, is collared and trimmed with sable, silver fox or chinchilla. Mink, Persian lamb and caracul will also be much worn; likewise nutria and squirrel; and coats of the more practical variety will be well represented by dyed peschaniki, hair seal and natural musquash. Ermine and white coney are worn almost universally in the evening.

The Infinite Variety of Styles

THE infinite variety of the season's styles is particularly apparent in coats; there is the wrap-over, fastening with a button on one side, and this same shape without a fastening—in the latter case the wearer must keep it in position with her hand, and in the doing give it a slightly draped effect; and the straight coat that fastens down the centre is equally fashionable.

See, above, up-to date millinery in felt and velour from Scott's, 1, Old Bond Street, W. Also "the latest" in hat ornaments and buttonholes

Wonderful Value in Peltry

WITH furs as important as they are in the Winter Fashion scheme, it is lucky indeed that with the prices that obtain at the National Fur Co., 193, Brompton Road, S.W.3, they are within reach of us all. See sketched on this page two of their new winter models. Two furs, Persian lamb and beaver, go to the making of the one on the left, priced at 49 guineas; the crêpe de Chine lining matching exactly the lovely warm shade of the deep beaver collar. For the other, mink marmot is used, worked in exactly the same way as mink and with all its rich appearance, although it is only priced at 39 guineas. Moleskin coats and capes from 12½ guineas, white coney capes and coats, as ordained by La Mode for evening wear, and full length, are to be obtained from 9½ guineas and 6 guineas will purchase one of the fashionable ties in marten and many other skins. Wonderful value! And, what's more, all the lovely furs sponsored by this firm can be purchased on deferred terms over a period of twelve months, or, in the case of purchases of over £100, this privilege can, if desired, be extended over eighteen months. A very real boon, this, for the great majority who, during the present financial depression, do not feel justified in putting down a lump sum. And what a safeguard against the extravagant practice (under the guise of economy!) of investing in cheap furs that look shabby in a very short time.

The Passing of Summer

WITH the official passing of summer (though many of us feel that there has been none this year!), autumn millinery enters into its kingdom. So far as actual line is concerned simplicity still prevails, but the use of two fabrics in one model, trimming that takes the form of applications, "cut-outs," and ornaments of every variety, tend to make the season's new models far more interesting than they have been for some time past. On the preceding page our artist has sketched some attractive styles from Scott's, 1, Old Bond Street, W. One, of black felt at 50*s*., stresses in quite a new way the prevailing vogue for black and white, for the felt is cut out and overlies white Petersham. The other, of beige velour, has a triangular "cut-out" over beige Petersham (48*s*. 6*d*.). So light is the new velour, by the way, that it has been described as handkerchief weight, an important consideration for modern woman, to whom anything hot and heavy is anathema at any season of the year. Note, too, the hat ornaments, for they are all-important at the moment. Carved horn, representing a daffodil and a deep orange in colour, expresses one, priced at 7*s*. 6*d*., and enamel and paste the other, at 10*s*. 6*d*. They are made with slots through which a ribbon band can be threaded. Scott's show quite a new version of the more than ever fashionable buttonhole. A dainty little glass affair, showing blue daisies with yellow centres, has been sketched (11*s*. 6*d*.), also a single rose with a natural leaf setting, expressed in the new bead work which is just as flexible as silk (7*s*. 6*d*.), and there are many others.

Paris Says Sports Models

THE sporting type of model predominated in the Paris Autumn collections, and the Englishwomen who very naturally wish to conform with Fashion's decrees will rejoice to hear that at Peter Robinson's, Oxford Street, and Regent Street, W., they can obtain an up-to-date little stockinette ensemble for the low price of 5½ guineas; ideal for travelling, country or town wear in the morning, with or without an overcoat. The model sketched consists of three pieces, a jumper with the fashionable horizontal effect, obtained by means of tucking, a skirt and sleeveless cardigan. It can be obtained in both plain and marled mixtures in all the season's new colourings; wood-browns, bright and reseda-greens, etc., etc. Another model sketched at Peter Robinson's shows a smart, well-tailored costume in West of England suiting; obtainable in all the latest autumn shades, including Lido blue, wood and cedar-browns; this costs 9½ guineas. It is a matter for the customer's preference whether she has a skirt to match her coat, or one checked or striped to tone, with a touch of the check or stripe on collar or pockets; and those who bemoan the fact that they are not what they term stock size can surely never have visited Peter Robinson's, who keep at least four sizes in nearly every model. It's an unlucky woman, indeed, who doesn't find that one of them fits her like the proverbial glove.

Umbrellas and bags de luxe are among the Season's new accessories to be found at J. C. Vickery, 145 Regent St., W.

Sketches by A. Titford

The All-important Accessories

AND accessories, every bit as important as the suits or gowns to which they lend the smart final touch! These are to be seen in their most attractive guise at Messrs. Vickery's, 145, Regent Street, W. Note, sketched at the bottom of the page, the very latest in umbrellas, so small of stature (a most practical quality in an umbrella!) that it will fit into a suit case and so not get lost on a journey. It can be obtained in all the new autumn shades and costs, with top and ferrule of ivory, £3 7*s*. 6*d*., and with a composite top, amber coloured, £2 2*s*. Another, at £3 7*s*. 6*d*., has a crook handle of lizard skin, one of the most fashionable reptiles of the moment. That reptile skin and leather combine to make the smartest bags of the season some sketches of Messrs. Vickery's newest styles exemplify. One, which can be obtained in leathers of various colours, has a strip of snake-skin down the centre, and costs £3 10*s*.; another, its frame covered with lizard skin, is priced at £3 7*s*. 6*d*.; and a card-case, cigarette case, matchbox, pen, lipstick, powder box, perfume container and comb are among the exquisitely enamelled fittings which the third bag, priced at £28 10*s*., contains. A handbag de luxe indeed!

Fashion's Foundation

FOR a woman to get together her new autumn wardrobe without first making sure that her corsets are designed in accordance with the season's new line, is like building a house and disregarding the foundations!

Sports wear at Peter Robinson, Ltd., Oxford Street and Regent Street, includes an up-to-date stockinette three-piece (above) and a smart costume (right) in West of England suiting

A crime that no woman should have to confess to, especially when the British W. Gossard Co., Ltd., gave a most interesting display of their new autumn range at 168, Regent Street, W., early in the month. That there is the right corset for every woman, and also the right and the wrong way of wearing them, were some of the interesting points demonstrated; special attention was paid to the lengthening and slenderising of the big figure, and the Gossardette, a firmly belted knicker to be worn with a brassière, aroused much interest. The latest Gossard models, which include, among others, corselette, hook-around and front lacing styles, are obtainable from all the leading drapers, stores, etc. And, by the way, they wash—another point in their favour!

A Guide to Autumn Styles

WHAT every woman wants at the beginning of a new season is a reliable and comprehensive guide to the coming styles—to be found, luckily, in Peter Robinson's beautifully illustrated and arranged Autumn Fashions Catalogue, a copy of which will be sent on application to Peter Robinson, Ltd., Oxford Street and Regent Street. The Right Spirit

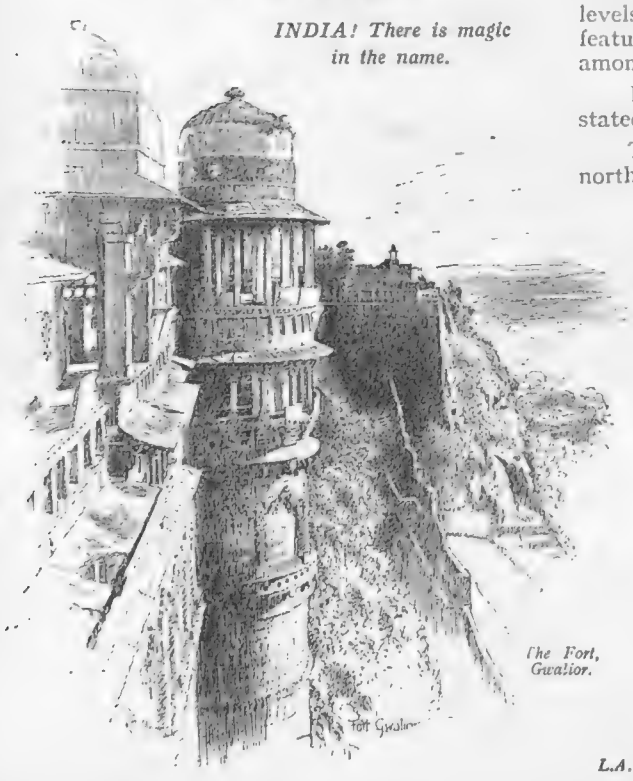
Scotland is justly famed for the whisky she produces, and the very fact that there are so many firms now in the market is a sign that none but the best whiskies can hope to hold their own. Messrs. Edward Young & Co., Ltd., of the Glenugie Distillery, Aberdeenshire, have been in the field since 1797 and still more than hold their own. Their Mountain Dew whisky, the style of which was modernised in 1833, has won by its superb quality a host of friends among those discriminating folk who, when they require whisky, are not content merely to demand "Scotch" and pay no attention to what brand they are served. Young's whisky is one which can—and indeed does—please the palate of the most discerning connoisseurs, and the host of friends old and new who favour this famous brand have no cause to look further afield for their whisky.

A New Service

With the introduction of the winter train service this week the L.N.E.R. announce that they are running an entirely new sleeping and breakfast car express train each week-day. It leaves King's Cross at 1.10 a.m. and is due at Edinburgh (Waverley Station) at 9.45 a.m., where it connects with the morning expresses for Glasgow, Perth, Inverness, Dundee, Montrose, Aberdeen, and Lossiemouth. Sleeping cars are included for passengers from King's Cross to Darlington, Durham, Newcastle, and Dunbar, as well as Edinburgh, and travellers by this train are able to occupy their sleeping berths at King's Cross from 11.30 p.m. onwards, and restaurant cars are attached at Newcastle for passengers wishing breakfast before reaching Edinburgh.

INDIA as a WINTER RESORT

INDIA! There is magic in the name.



The Fort, Gwalior.

INDIA in the "cold weather" (November–March) offers a genuine summer retreat from the bleak winter months of more northerly lands. The traveller who sets out on a first visit to this ancient land is on the threshold of a great adventure, for India has attractions whose variety and interest are beyond the power of exaggeration. Strung along the railway roads which wander across its face are many cities, some in the full tide of life; some lifeless, whose ruined stones may still be read; some almost perfect as their builders made them, deserted, yet charged, in their resounding silences, with imaginative pictures of bygone ambitions and vanished dynasties. Always and everywhere, the people of India remain, industrious, kindly, humorous, goodly to look upon, as one may realise in any Indian city street or in one's passage over India's alluvial plains. At her higher levels life in India is of a harder complexion; there, on the strongly marked features of men and women, is written a racial history of peril and age-long war among the fastnesses of the high hills.

Railway travel in India is easy, cheap and agreeable. By many travellers it is stated to be the most comfortable in the world.

The Indian State Railways serve, besides Calcutta and Bombay, all the more northerly tracts of India; their scheduled trains convey the curious visitor in comfort by night and day. The special tourist coach obeys no schedule; it is stopped or carried onward at the will of its temporary owner. To travel by such a coach, replete with every desirable appointment—kitchen, servants' quarters, bathroom (with running water, hot and cold), sitting-room, dining- and bedrooms—is to enjoy a degree of luxury undreamed of in earlier days.

Note.—You can travel first-class London to and from India (or Ceylon) by P. & O. between December and February for a hundred guineas, spend two weeks in India and be back inside two months; or overland both ways via Marseilles for £120 and be back within six weeks. For the same sea-fares the holiday may be extended to twelve weeks. Particulars from P. & O. S.N. Co., 14, Cockspur Street, S.W.1.

Rail travel information concerning INDIA may be had from the State Railways' Representative, P. & O. House, as below; Statistical and Commercial enquiries should be addressed to the Indian Trade Commissioner, 42, Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.1.

FRUIT COMPOTES

Compôte of Melon.
Compôte of Pears.
Apricot Apples.
Banana and Sponge Cake Jellies.
Coffee Ice-Cream.

Compôte of Melon

Choose a fair-sized, ripe water melon, remove the seeds, and with a silver knife carefully remove the pulp. Make a syrup with 1 lb. of granulated sugar, one cupful of water, and half a teaspoonful of cornflour. Simmer until clear, lay in the melon, cut in strips, a few at a time, and simmer for five minutes. Put them into a glass or silver dish, boil down the syrup until very thick, add half a cupful of white wine, and when it is sufficiently cool pour over the melon and stand on ice till ready to serve.

Compôte of Pears

Peel thinly some stewing pears, cut each in half or quarters, and take out the cores. Boil up half a pint of water with ½ lb. of granulated sugar, skim it, and add the rind of half a lemon and three cloves. When it has become a thick syrup pour it over the pears in a stone jar, cover with a lid, and cook them gently in the oven till done. A little cochineal should be added to the syrup.

Apricot Apples

Peel and core four large apples. Stand them in a pie-dish and pour sufficient water to reach about half-way up the apples. Put them into a moderately hot oven and bake until the fruit is quite soft, being careful to keep the apples whole. When half-cooked turn them over on to the other side until finished. Then lift each up carefully with a slice, drain off the water, place in a dish, and smooth them over with a knife. Heat up four tablespoonfuls of apricot jam, rub it through a sieve, and coat each apple with it. Serve hot or cold, and just before serving sprinkle lightly with desiccated coconut.

Banana and Sponge Cake Jellies

Dissolve one pint packet of strawberry jelly in a pint of hot water. Peel the bananas and mash to a pulp. Crumble three sponge cakes finely, stir both into the jelly and mix together. Pour into some little moulds and leave until set. Turn out.

Coffee Ice-cream

Stir half-pint of boiling milk to half-pint of strong coffee, add the yolks of four eggs and 6 oz. of castor sugar. Put it into a double boiler and stir till it thickens. Let it cool, add a gill of cream, pour into a mould, and freeze.

Devilled Almonds

Blanch about a ¼ lb. of sweet almonds, sprinkle them with cayenne and a little salt; fry them in butter until a rich golden brown, and put them on paper to drain well. Serve hot. Emilia.

Grey Hair

GREY hair that is re-coloured with Inecto looks precisely as it did ere Nature's colour failed; the shade is matched exactly, but of more importance is the soft tone imparted by Inecto. For Inecto is the one recolorative that leaves no harshness—the hair resumes its youthful delicacy of texture with its permanent Inecto colouring.

And so, if you would have your greying hair recoloured, ask your hairdresser for the Inecto treatment; afterwards you may have your hair marcel or permanently waved and dressed in your usual style.

All natural children love a show, the histrionic instinct is born in them. So, too, is the liking for pretty frocks and smart suits. Joan will admit it though Peter, perhaps, may pretend to be too manly. Now Science Solves Woman's Greatest Problem

The new way approved by doctors and nurses, which 5,000,000 women have adopted practically overnight

Security and Immaculacy under ALL conditions. Non-Detectable under closest-fitting frocks. No Disposal problem. Deodorizes !

By HILDA V. ADAMS, Registered Nurse

IN the past few years 5,000,000 women have changed old habits in personal hygiene and are adopting a new way recommended by doctors and nurses.

This new way is science's solution of woman's oldest problem. It gives greater personal immaculacy, a new freedom—relief from embarrassment and fear under most trying conditions.

This new way is called Kotex—successor to old-fashioned sanitary pads.

5 times more absorbent

Kotex is the only sanitary pad filled with Cellucotton wadding, the remarkable super-absorbent recently discovered.

Thus it provides the amazing absorbency of 16 times its own weight in moisture. It is five times as absorbent as the ordinary cotton pad. Thus sheerest frocks may now be worn in peace of mind and security, regardless how trying one's hygienic problem.

Kotex discards as easily as tissue. No laundry, no embarrassment of disposal.

Made by one of the world's most respected makers of hospital absorbents, Kotex is impregnated, under secret process, with an active deodorant.

IMPERCEPTIBLE—even under closest-fitting gowns

Kotex is scientifically designed for SAFETY and NON-DETECTABILITY in wear. Years of experiment were spent perfecting it.

Kotex is obtainable at chemists, drapers and stores everywhere. 12 in sanitary wrapped boxes.

Be sure the name KOTEX is on the box you purchase. If the name Kotex is not there, you are not obtaining genuine KOTEX. Only Kotex is "like" Kotex. No other product is "like Kotex."

To-day get Kotex and learn what it has come to mean to the great numbers of women who have adopted it. It is at least worth a trial !

PROTECTS—DEODORIZES

No laundry—discard as easily as a piece of tissue

Made in Canada

Easy Disposal.

and 3 other important factors

① No laundry. As easy to dispose of as a piece of tissue—thus ending the trying problem of disposal. Kotex also thoroughly deodorises.

② Utter protection and non-detectable—Kotex absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture; 5 times that of cotton. Scientifically designed to be Form-Fitting. Kotex is imperceptible when worn with smoothest-fitting frocks.

③ Easy to buy anywhere. Many shops keep them ready-wrapped in plain paper — simply help yourself, pay the assistant, that is all.

This permanent wave leaves your hair supple and easy to set

The Nestlé artists never wave and dress two heads exactly alike. With the flair that comes from years of experience, they find just the right line and curve of waves that suit you best. This wonderful service costs no more than ordinary permanent waving costs elsewhere.

The Lining- a big feature in Suit Service.

THE main object of sports clothes is the utmost freedom of movement. A suit with a harsh, unyielding Lining is far from being comfortable in wear. Many Linings feel smooth and look well at first. But the conditions of golf and the several other forms of sport show that the surface is only surface. Following a few strenuous days wear, the Lining may even split. With "COURTINE" LININGS, there is no danger. Their smoothness and clear colour outlast many seasons' hard use. Definitely guaranteed, and available through all tailors in an excellent range of designs and qualities, suitable for all kinds and colour of cloth.

We, therefore, do not have to mark our tyres "reinforced," as we set the standard as regards the thickness of the cords or the number of plies necessary, especially in the size 730×130, or its equivalent in the straight side, the 28×4.95. We give this explanation because we are often asked if our tyres are reinforced.

CHARITY AND THE PUBLIC SERVICE

YOUR NEWSVENDOR IS A HUMBLE MAN

He never obtrudes on your notice, because his work is done before you rise.

He is never late, because your breakfast is timed for 8.45.

He never fails in bad weather, hail or snow, because his little business is organised to overcome such trifles.

He never says he "Can't get" what you want, because he depends on doing the impossible for a living.

He never charges you for "service," because "service" is what he lives for.

Yet your newsvendor is performing a great and public duty —every day of every week of every year—without any claim on you, and without any charge for his service.

Every morning when you rise your paper is ready, delivered an hour before—(and how many of our stores would perform such a service daily for one penny?)

You have only to order a paper, no matter in what country it is published, and it will be sent to you without any worry on your part. The service is so thoroughly dependable that you never question it.

DON'T YOU THINK THEN THAT YOU OUGHT TO SPARE A LITTLE TOWARDS HELPING THOSE WHO HELP YOU EVERY DAY OF YOUR LIFE?
No matter how competent a man may be, sickness, ill-health, misfortune, may overtake him; and in the newsvending business there is little margin for such contingencies.

The Newsvendors Benevolent and Provident Institution has hitherto largely confined its appeals to those in "the trade." Now, however, it is taking the bold step of inviting the assistance of the general public, whom its members serve so faithfully. Will you give it your support?

MR. WILLIAM HARRISON, LL.B.
(Chairman of Illustrated Newspapers Limited), appeals for funds in support of this excellent charitable Society.

The 88th Annual Festival, at which Mr. Harrison will preside, will be held on Tuesday, the 18th October, 1927, at the Hotel Cecil.

Contributions may be sent to Mr. William Harrison, at 6, Great New Street, London, E.C.4, or to the Secretary of the Newsvendors Benevolent & Provident Institution at Memorial Hall Building, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.4.

The British Winter has Infinite Variety fog, frost, rain, snow, wind, in every possible degree. It hates monotony and never tires of working surprises. And its surprises can have most unpleasant effects — especially with children. See that they have "all-weather" protection—in other words, give them "Chilprufe."

CHILPRUFE Regd. FOR CHILDREN

Not only a perfect safeguard to health, but light and supple of fabric and design, so that movement is never impeded. "Chilprufe's" wonderful softness is the outcome of the finest yarn, close knitting, and the application of a secret "finish." This process is also highly effectual in preserving shape and texture.

Every possible need is provided for in our new stock of these delightful and enduring garments, in all models—girls', boys' and infants'.

ONCE UPON A TIME

the corset and the corslet were made of steel—the corslet for the knight and the corset for the lady. Probably the same armourer made them both! He went to battle in a hundred-weight of metal; she languished at home. The corslet has long been a museum piece, but the corset persists to-day—not a grim affair of steel and whalebone, but a pliant sheath, so subtle that its presence is never suspected. Study this question ot Corsetry, and write to D. H. Evans & Co. Ltd., Oxford Street for a copy of The Twilfit Corset Book. It will help you to choose just that corset which your figure needs.

DEAFNESS

Pride — Progress — and Confidence.

Pride is not always that which goes before a fall—we review the progress of "ARDENTE" with a justified pride. From it is born the confidence in the future—a confidence that the genuine scientific and only individual method for helping the deaf to hear again, naturally, simply, inconspicuously and true-to-tone must reflect itself in the continuance of the marvellous success and steady growth of popularity.

Fitting, service, price, values—these important essentials have been studied and perfected so well as to bring that much overworked word "best" into its true meaning. "ARDENTE."

the AID the SIZE of a BUTTON, was so essentially different and common-sense that its success was instantaneous. This uncopyable method at once confirmed that the individual way is, and alone can be, the BEST way. Human ills (deafness) vary so in the individual that the only method to adopt is the "ARDENTE" individual way—and this is confirmed by the fact that

"Ardente" is chosen for commendation by the whole of the important Medical Press.

"Ardente" is chosen for recommendation by Aurists and Doctors who know.

"Ardente" is chosen for use by Doctors, Scientists, Social Leaders, Politicians, Lawyers, Churchmen—as well as thousands of the general deaf public of all ages and both sexes.

This can only be because the Guaranteed "ARDENTE" is the BEST method—facts are proof, your ears will tell you. Whether "hard of hearing," so-called "stone" deaf (head noises), YOU CAN HEAR. Scepticism turned to satisfaction.

THE FAMOUS

since first introduced by Mr. R. H. Dent in 1924 has proved to be the greatest boon to the deaf because it is so mellow and natural. No aid so scientifically perfect has ever yet been conceived.

Reasonable Standard Prices put "Ardente" and Hearing within the reach of all.

CALL for personal demonstration and test, and discuss your hearing without fee or obligation.

If unable to call, send for details and Medical Reports.

Three British Light Aeroplane Records on Wakefield Castrol

Capt. H. S. Broad, flying a De Havilland "Tiger Moth" on August 24th, covered 100 Kilometres in a closed circuit at 186.47 m.p.h., and on the same machine five days later reached an altitude of 20,000 feet in seventeen minutes. On both occasions Wakefield CASTROL was used in the De Havilland Engine of nominally 32 h.p.

To add to these remarkable performances on CASTROL, Mr. Bert Hinkler, flying an "Avro Avian" (Cirrus engine), established a distance record, flying from Croydon to Riga on August 27th, 1,200 miles, in 10 hours 42 minutes, also using CASTROL

'Duggie' explains~

"Unsigned Telegrams."

No. 11.

Sir Edward : "I have called this morning, Stuart, to express my thanks and appreciation of the manner in which you dealt with the unsigned wire I sent you last week."

Duggie : "I have no personal knowledge of the incident, Sir Edward May I enquire what happened?"

Sir Edward : "I sent a telegram investing £50 each way on 'Forsetti' and foolishly omitted to sign it. Your Manager rang up my secretary to know whether it was my telegram, as it was handed in at Selsey, and he was therefore fortunately able to confirm it before the race. You must have a wonderful staff; had it not been for their efficiency, I should have missed winning £1,250."

Duggie : "Your praise is very gratifying to me, Sir Edward, because one of my principal objects is to avoid any misunderstanding. Yours is only an everyday incident. It's surprising how careless some people can be in writing wires."

Sir Edward : "Then all I have to say, Stuart, is that your clients are extremely fortunate. May I mention this incident to my friends?"

Duggie : "Certainly, Sir Edward."

"Duggie Explains" series are based on actual conversations held with clients.
